Ah, but this is the university way, it seems. We simply could not have an institution of higher learning if it did not involve chemistry professors complaining about the English department.

But complaining is one thing, and trying to actively control is another.

Take this publication for instance. Despite the "student" in front of Student Publications Inc. many of our esteemed academics feel the need to exert control over what goes in the paper.

Now this is hardly a new phenomenon. Ever since the printing press came about, the "powers that be" have tried to control what was printed, always with the people's best interest at heart of course.

There are many ways that one can work with the Collegian. But don't get it into your melon to arbitrarily change the way in which a newspaper operates if you've never worked for a newspaper or even taken a journalism class.

If I have failed to be direct enough, I will phrase it bluntly: butt out.

You see, once a paper is told what to publish, it ceases to be press and becomes propaganda.

While controlled media might be the norm in practically all of our major outlets, I still like to imagine that it is not so here.

There are enough of us who are still young, idealistic and pissed off enough to tell the withered bearers of censorship that not only are they not welcome, but that trespassers will be shot.

I invite suggestions or comments with open arms, but submitting demands is useless.

I can assure you that the toilet paper in Kedzie Hall does not need to be supplemented with your memos, and it would be degrading to the half ply to be forced to compete with the pre-soiled paper you are sending us.

If you find yourself foaming at the mouth now, congratulations. You are one of the people I am talking about: the mighty purveyors of academic stupidity, the Rolls-Royce of stupid.

But maybe you are more academic than me. Maybe your education gives you the right to tell others what they can and can't say.

Maybe you are the self-proclaimed wizard behind the curtain of everything studios. But guess what?

Absolutely no one cares. Least of all, me.

Black alumni return to K-State campus for fellowship at biannual reunion

Weekend event brings dozens of alumni back

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The basic values of love, unity, respect, honesty, brotherhood/sisterhood and fellowship brought 60 black alumni to K-State this weekend.

"Black to Basics" was the theme for this year's event.

"Just to be around black people, renewing friendships - it's good to meet new people," alumnus John L. Caldwell said.

The purpose of the event is multi-faceted, said Brandon Clark, chair and coordinator of multicultural programs for the K-State Alumni Association.

"This event will give the black alumni the opportunity to reconnect with old friends, revisit their old college campus and share their knowledge and experiences with the current African-American students," Clark said.

The Black Alumni Reunion first began in the 1980s as an annual event but changed in the 1990s to a biannual event.

"We just thought it would be more effective and cut down on costs if we had it every other year," Clark said.

The reunion began with a welcome back reception for the alumni Friday.

Graduates as early as the 1950s were in attendance; Caldwell graduated in 1954.

After returning from the military, Caldwell said he came to K-State because it was the only school in the Big 6 Conference to allow blacks on the track team.

Due to segregation, when the team raced in the South, Caldwell was not able to participate.

Clark noted the importance of alumni presence at K-State.

"It's important for the black students to know their struggles,"

Nozella Brown, class of 1976, follows along to the scripture reading during the 2004 Black Alumni Reunion's Sunday worship service. Alumni returned to K-State for a weekend of activities, including a discussion with current students, a tailgating party and a dance. Current students were encouraged to come and learn from the alumni's experiences.

Clark said.

"Many of these alumni started BSU, UBV, NSBE, Greeks. They paved a way for us to be a success."

Participants raised issues of diversity and how to make the next reunion even more successful during a Student/Alumni Dialogue.

Many alumni were surprised to see the same adversities they faced while at K-State are still present.

"I'm disappointed to see them dealing with the same issues," said Cecil Ricks, 1980 alumnus.

Caldwell, who traveled from Kalamazoo, Mich., said he thinks the young black people have done well in spite of the negative conditions.

On Sunday ordained minister and alumnus LaVerne Williamson spoke at All Faiths Chapel.

The events concluded with a farewell brunch at the Alumni Center.

Caldwell, who was accompanied by his wife, said students should realize that one day they will be alumni.

"I'm hoping this is the start for the alumni to come have a good time, and encourage others to come out next time," Clark said.

The Black Student Union, K-State Alumni Association, and the Diversity and Dual Career Development sponsored the event.

Runners provide strong finish

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's cross country team finished seventh at the Cowboy Jamboree on Saturday despite the absence of their top runner, senior Mathew Chesang.

Coach Michael Smith said Chesang was in a car accident earlier in the week and held from racing as a precautionary step.

"He's fine, he's running, but he's obviously a little shaken by the accident," Smith said.

In Chesang's place, sophomore Tyler Roark led the Wildcats with a career day. Roark placed 28th overall in a personal best time of 25:32 — 34 seconds faster than his previous best.

Roark said he was excited about his race and pleased with the team's performance.

"I thought we ran well. I had one of the best races of my life," Roark said. "We ran well as a team even though we were missing our top runner."

Twenty-one teams competed on the men's side, and K-State placed in the top-10 overall for the third meet this year. K-State runners Joe Moore and Micha Gamper turned in solid performances, placing 30th and 37th, respectively. Along the way, K-State beat conference rival Texas Tech, which placed eighth.

Smith said he liked his team's performance, but he sees room for improvement.

"We ran about as well as we could expect. We beat Texas Tech, and they are a team from our conference that we need to be able to beat," Smith said. "We did not beat Texas A&M, and we need to take a shot at them at the conference meet. We need to get just a little bit better so we can run with them."

The K-State women's team turned out another top-five finish, as senior Trisha Culbertson led the way for the Wildcats — who placed fifth — by placing 13th with a time of 18:21.

Culbertson said she was happy with the team's race but somewhat disappointed with herself.

"I should have raced better than I did," Culbertson said.

After Saturday, Smith said he wanted more.

"I would have hoped, maybe, we could have been fourth had we ran a little bit better," Smith said.

K-State's finish was helped by the races of junior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle and senior Cate Holston. Roman-Del Valle cut 1:07 off her personal-best time to finish 24th, while Holston chopped 2:01 from her previous best, to place 33rd.

Smith said Holston's performance was a pleasant surprise.

"She's never been our third before, so that was a very good thing to see her step up like that," Smith said.

Culbertson said the team is improving and still has high goals.

"...I think we will keep improving, and we will be prepared for what comes next. We still have some great things we can do," Culbertson said.

Women's golf team seeks improvement

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team is seeking redemption this morning, as the Wildcats tee off in the first round of New Mexico State University's two-day Price's Give 'Em Five Challenge in Las Cruces, N.M.

Coach Kristi Knight said the team is hoping to bounce back after the Wildcats carded a 631 and a 15th-place finish in the Jeannine McHaney Invitational last week.

"Last week's tournament definitely served as a wake-up call. We realized there are a lot of good teams out there," Knight said.

After a week of practice, Knight said she feels the qualifiers — seniors Sarah Heffel and Stephanie Limoges, sophomore Helene Robert and freshmen Kali Quick and Michelle Regan — are ready for the Challenge.

"We've tried to make last week's experience positive by working on things that didn't go well," Knight said. "We're just going to go after it and try and do it again."

In the 19-team field, Heffel said there is a lot of unseen competition in this tournament. Heffel, who finished sixth at the Challenge last year, said the team definitely feels confident going into competition today.

"We're a really close team, and I think we have the ability to regroup," Heffel said. "We should be ready to compete."

Regan, who is making her top-five debut this week, said she considers herself prepared for the Challenge.

"We shot the same yardage at Colbert Hills as the course in Snyder still finds positives in weekend loss to Texas A&M

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — K-State turned the ball over four times and lost 42-30 to Texas A&M Saturday night at Kyle Field.

"Obviously it was a disaster at the time," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We got beat by what was a better football team tonight. I thought they played better than we did."

The game opened Big 12 Conference play for both the Wildcats and Aggies. The loss brought the Cats' record to 0-1 in the Big 12 and 2-2 overall, while Texas A&M moved to 3-1 on the season.

Averaging three yards per carry, senior running back Darren Sproles rushed for 61 total yards but fumbled the ball on four occasions, two of which were lost to the Aggies.

"Part of it is, he presses awfully hard," Snyder said. "You look at it how it happened, two of them happened on punt returns. That's something he needs to work on."

The two fumbles Sproles lost were both deep in Wildcat territory and led to two Aggie touchdowns.

After the game, Sproles said he hadn't lost confidence, but the loss was still a painful one.

"It's gonna hurt, it's gonna hurt. We've got to move on, we've got to move on," Sproles said.

Sophomore Dylan Meier started at quarterback and played the entire game — his first full game of the season.

Meier rushed for 44 yards on 22 carries and completed 29 passes on 45 attempts for a career-high 246 yards.

However, Meier also threw two interceptions during the game, one at the end of the third quarter to A&M's Japhus Brown, which was returned 32 yards to the K-State two-yard line.

Snyder said Meier played well, and even though the quarterback made mistakes, Snyder said he has the ability to put those behind him.

"That's the thing about Dylan that you like," Snyder said. "He's a young quarterback who's going to make mistakes, but he doesn't let one of them compound into another and another. That takes a youngster who has some of those intrinsic values you talk about and has some character."

The Aggies' offense scored on the first play of the fourth quarter — following the Meier interception — on a two-yard

WTEN | Rosenberg stays alive at Riviera/All-American

K-State senior tennis player Maria Rosenberg advanced to the final pre-qualifying round at the Riviera/All-American Championship this weekend in Los Angeles.

Rosenberg knocked off Nika Koukhartchouk of Mississippi and Lauren Archer of Duke in Sunday's action to advance in the prestigious tournament.

The Manhattan native is now two wins away from fifth place on the all-time K-State career singles wins list.

Junior Jessica Simosa — K-State's other representative at the competition — is now out of the tournament after falling to Helena Besovic of Texas Christian Sunday morning after defeating Madison Sellers of Wisconsin Saturday.

In doubles play, Rosenberg and Simosa dropped out of the tournament Saturday after an 8-4 loss to Wang/O'Riano of Harvard.

Up next for Rosenberg is a 9:00 a.m. (Pacific time) match against Zsuzana Fodor of Mississippi State

NASCAR | Earnhardt Jr. wins, claims lead in points race.

Dale Earnhardt Jr. charged from 11th place to a victory and the series points lead in the last five laps of Sunday's NASCAR Nextel Cup race at Talladega Superspeedway.

Although he was at or near the front virtually the entire EA Sports 500, leading a race-high 78 of the 188 laps, Earnhardt fell behind when crew chief Tony Eury Sr. decided to gamble on two fresh right-side tires on his final pit stop.

His 14th career victory and fifth of the season also moved Earnhardt from third in the standings to a 13-point lead over Kurt Busch, who finished fifth. Gordon, who came into the race with a one-point lead over Busch, finished 19th and fell to third, 61 points behind after three of the 10 races in NASCAR's new 10-man playoff-style championship.

Netters rally to beat Cyclones in five games

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Inside an uncharacteristically chilly Ahearn Field House, the No. 15 K-State volleyball team survived a cold start to beat Iowa State 3-2 Saturday.

K-State fell behind 2-1 before taking games four and five to win 30-22, 37-39, 30-32, 30-13 and 15-9. After winning game one, K-State struggled in games two and three, as Iowa State used two late comebacks to take a 2-1 lead on the Wildcats.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her decision-making had an effect on her team's play.

"I think I made some personnel changes a little too early in game two," Fritz said. "We played very well in games one, four and five, but I think some poor decisions on my part in game two lost our rhythm."

K-State (10-4, 4-1) was led by senior middle blocker Lisa Martin, who had 10 kills and no errors, as she hit an impressive .667 for the match. Also leading the charge for K-State was junior Agata Rezende with 15 kills and senior Vali Hejjas with 13 kills.

Fritz said Rezende's play has improved with every start.

"Offensively, she's very terminal," Fritz said. "She's learning when she can really take a big swing and when she can't — maybe because of the quality of the set or the situation isn't right. As she learns that, she's gotten better and better."

After Iowa State led 2-1, K-State came out on fire in game four. The Wildcats scorched the Cyclones by hitting .344 to Iowa State's .057 to tie the match.

Senior Lisa Martin said the Wildcats corrected their mistakes in game four and started playing better overall.

"I think we finally figured out we needed to step up and start playing a little bit," Martin said. "Our intensity got better. We started passing better. We started serving better, and we had less errors."

Freshman Erin Boeve led Iowa State (7-6, 1-5) with 13 kills on .292 hitting and three service aces. As a team, the Cyclones hit .134 for the match.

Senior Gabby Guerre gave Iowa State credit for their play.

"They were serving really aggressive. They were a really scrappy team," she said. "They work as one unit and that's very hard to beat."

With K-State's 14 service aces, the Wildcats have had 10 or more service aces in four straight matches.

Fritz said aggressive serving is a strong point for her team, but she wants to see fewer errors.

"We want to take some risks in our serving," Fritz said. "We

Lawrence band rules alt-country

Album review by Tony Herrman

Arthur Dodge & The Horsefeathers are the zenith of alt-country and folk bands.

Although the band cuts loose with a jam on nearly every song of its fourth album, "Room #4," it is also extremely tight and contains no filler.

Depending on the song, Dodge & the Horsefeathers resemble Bruce Springsteen, Tom Petty, Bob Dylan and even Randy Newman.

Dodge's singing most resembles Dylan just before his "Wee-be-Wee" period, with nearly incoherent lyrics. The Horsefeathers add to Dodge's vocals, a more contemporary sound more like Jakob Dylan's band the Wallflowers.

Like the Beatles' "White Album," "Room #4" will incur a different favorite song for each person who listens.

My favorite is the second track, "Creature of the Night." The song's narrator encourages a lady friend to accept his nocturnal habits.

The straining vocals and funky keyboard riffs sounds like Newman. Like any good song about a girl, "Creature of the Night" also emotes a tangible insecurity.

"I'm a creature of the night: impressed by what I see, so afraid of what the day brings," Dodge sings.

Dodge and the Horsefeathers, based in Lawrence, come to town a couple times each year for the Manhattan faithful. On Sept. 25 in Auntie Mae's Parlor, the band played the best Aggieville concert I've heard since the Schwag at O'Malley's Halloween 2001.

You can tell the band's in town when the big Dodge van is parked in front of Mae's.

As the intro on the band's Web site says, "Room #4" would make a perfect soundtrack to a post-breakup appointment with a side-alley bar and some strong whiskey, or a soul-searching drive across the country.

Although it's not on an alley, Mae's basement is just as good, with its smoke-filled stage the size of a small Buick.

Aside from tunes more smooth than a mint julep, "Room #4" has another attribute. The cover features a beautiful nude woman, who co-incidentally is a waitress at Mae's.

Despite being a talented songwriter and musician, Dodge is also a good judge of character. He signed the liner notes to my copy of the album, "U shouldn't drink so much!"

Even though Arthur Dodge & The Horsefeathers are based Lawrence, listen to "Room #4," and you'll agree the band has the chops to be nationally known.

Studies abroad

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Columnist's trip to Russia leads to cultural enlightenment

Studying abroad provides a great chance to learn that we are all alike, no matter where in the world people come from. We are all joined by a common set of hopes and fears.

Let me relate an experience from my second trip to Russia during the summer of 2001, when I had a run in with the Russian law.

"I found it," he said.
"Found what?" I asked.
"The KGB. We gotta see it."
"Umm... Sure thing. Where is it?"
"It's between the bell tower at the white Kremlin and the open market we went to last Sunday."

"Great. Maybe I can replace the fake gold ring I bought there. The cheap color they used keeps rubbing off."

"All right, Sunday then. Well, me and Donna have to eat dinner, so we'll talk to you later."

"Bye." I set down the receiver. It would be dinner time here soon. I took out my journal and jotted down some notes. I wanted to recall every moment I lived in Russia. I wanted memoirs.

In a few minutes my host mother would come in, and we'd talk about Michael Jackson. I was listening to "Billie Jean" on my compilation CD of "Bad" and "Thriller." A few days later I would karaoke to it and amaze a Russian crowd by introducing the Moonwalk. After reminiscing on the great Eddie Van's "Beat It" solo she told me to clean up for dinner.

I set out mid-morning Sunday with my friends Chad and Donna. It was a long walk across Kazan, but the weather was temperate rather than the normal scathing heat, so we decided not to pay the six cents it would cost to take the tram.

We went to the market first. I bought some cucumber seeds that I couldn't bring back due to Dept. of Agriculture regulations, but that I held hopes to grow here until the day before we departed. This may sound like an unimportant purchase, but only to those who have not eaten in Russia. Here we eat cucumbers because they have a juicy crisp texture. In Russia they still have that, but are bursting with flavor.

Later, leaning against a chain-link fence, we stood across from an office building. On the building's front we saw a K, a gamma, and the letter that sounds like a B but looked nothing like any other letters we knew.

This was unquestionably the offices of the KGB, the Russian secret police. We admired the architecture for a few minutes before Chad suggested striking a pose. We all took turns in front of the camera. Some of us showcased the letters as though we were Vanna and the KGB was one of the special sections of the Wheel of Fortune. Other times we tried our hardest to look like detectives.

After we'd amused ourselves for a few minutes, we saw some men in suits pass in and out through the doors. We decided they made a great photo opportunity.

Five minutes later another man opened the door, but this time we didn't photograph him. He motioned to us with his finger before we could.

"Maybe they're going to give us a tour," Chad said.

I didn't imagine anything so benevolent. "Yeah, maybe," I said.

They led us to a room with a long table and three chairs. We took our seats.

Across from us sat a variety of men with very serious faces. The lights went down and a bright spotlight replaced them, the kind that is shined in the eyes of criminals in interrogation rooms. Or at least the kind in interrogation rooms on TV shows and in movies.

As they mumbled to themselves, we mumbled to ourselves. We tried to look cool, and in truth our fear was only half-formed. I was uncomfortable to say the least, but I thought I'd get out of there alive.

Then the questions came. We each knew about a third of the Russian language, and luckily for us we all knew different thirds. We figured out most of the questions and provided truthful answers. When they shouted to check our nationality we sheepishly said we were Americans. When they asked our purpose, we came to learn.

I had started to get a little bit of a cold sweat at this point, but not from break dancing in a walk-in freezer like I'm James Brown. This was the sweat of fear. I had hairs standing. We hadn't done anything, of course, but I was still worried. What if they suspected us of espionage?

After a few more minutes of questioning one of the men on the other side of the room guffawed and almost fell out of his chair.

When he spoke it was in perfect English.

"You guys were about to piss your pants," he said between laughs. "You thought you were all going to the gulag. Quit watching so much James Bond."

We smiled and got up and shook hands. They patted us on the back and politely asked that we take no more pictures.

The sun felt warmer outside than it had when we went in.

Few lessons are better learned than those of self-knowledge. I had loved and trusted the Russian people for two years at that point, but never had I experienced one so adept at deconstructing stereotypes.

Don't be afraid to jump into a new culture and take that step toward friendship. We all instinctively know how to have the same emotions of laughter and fear.

Praying fan barred from contacting Gibson

Mel Gibson obtained a temporary restraining order against a man who allegedly showed up at his estate and the chapel he attends, demanding they pray together.

Zack Sinclair, 34, was arrested Sept. 20 for investigation of disorderly conduct and loitering and remained jailed Friday on $5,000 bail pending an Oct. 6 court hearing.

Gibson

The restraining order was issued a day after his arrest, and bars him from coming within 150 yards of Gibson, his wife or their seven children. He also cannot contact the actor.

Sinclair allegedly went to the gate of Gibson's estate twice in September and asked to pray with the actor. He was first ordered away and then detained.

Sinclair also allegedly sent letters to Gibson and his family in which he recounted his prayers for the actor, cited biblical verse and praised Gibson's movie "The Passion of the Christ."

"I continue to be extremely concerned for the safety of my family," Gibson said in the court filing.

Stones drummer reportedly beats cancer

Rolling Stones drummer Charlie Watts has won a battle with throat cancer, lead singer Mick Jagger was quoted as telling a newspaper Saturday.

Watts, 63, was diagnosed with cancer four months ago and recently finished a successful six-week chemotherapy treatment at the Royal Marsden Hospital near his home in London's Chelsea district.

"Charlie has had all his treatments and he's now been cleared and is free of any illness," Jagger told the Daily Mirror.

Desmond Tutu stars in off-Broadway play

Moving from the pulpit to the stage, Desmond Tutu is appearing off-Broadway in a drama blasting the Bush administration's handling of Guantanamo Bay detainees.

The retired South African prelate and Nobel laureate appeared Saturday night at a tiny theater in lower Manhattan, playing a judge in "Guantanamo: Honor Bound To Defend Freedom." The play portrays the plight of British detainees at the U.S. naval base in Cuba.

Standing onstage before a scene resembling holding pens at the detention camp, Tutu said he chose to appear in the play to highlight concerns about the treatment of the prisoners.

dozens of phone calls and hours of e-mails to find housing for the students.

"It makes it even harder that most of the students have animals to house, as well," Brown said.

Martin said Manhattan businesses and K-State students have been helpful in setting the students up for the semester.

"People have been amazing. Students opened up their homes, some aren't charging rent or are keeping it cheap. Some of the small businesses have offered to help us out, too," Martin said.

Brown said many companies have offered to furnish apartments, purchase school supplies and donate gift certificates.

Jennifer Turner, second-year veterinary medicine student, searched for donations from local businesses to furnish supplies for the St. George students.

Turner said multiple school supplies have been donated, discounts have been offered for pet and human food and K-State Division of Facilities were contacted.

She said Varney's donated $25 certificates for school supplies, several food restaurants have offered discounts, free animal food has been donated, and Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex is open to the students.

"Everyone is just so great to help us out," Turner said. "I'm happy they're here and things will get settled down."

John McKibben, director of teaching at St. George University, said he was thrilled K-State could help out.

McKibben said there are about 10 professors with the group, but they are ready to continue on with the semester.

"It's about time we get this started up again," McKibben said.

McKibben said several schools volunteered to help out with the students, but the dean suggested K-State because of its reputation and because it is his alma mater.

He said the students would be willing to work with the Humane Society if needed to help out the community that has helped them.

"I'm excited and nervous to know what is going to go on," McKibben said.

Kevin Haynes, second-year veterinary medicine student and ambassador, said he would like to make the transition for the students as easy as possible.

"It's exciting to meet these students new to the area, from a college outside the U.S. It benefits both us and them to have the diversity," Haynes said.

touchdown run by sophomore running back Courtney Lewis, who had three rushing touchdowns against the Cats.

Senior cornerback Cedrick Williams said it's still up to the defense to make key plays even if its back is up against a wall.

"We can't control where we are when we go on defense," Williams said. "No matter where we are, we've got to keep playing. We've got to make the plays when they come."

Even though K-State allowed a total of five rushing and one passing touchdowns, Williams said the defensive unit made progress.

"I think a lot of young players grew tonight," Williams said. "We made plays and fought the whole game. There was great intensity tonight. No one ever quit."

Snyder also said he finally saw things he had been looking for since the beginning of the season.

"Normally, it's a hard loss to have, but I was pleased with some things that have not been there for the first three weeks of the season," Snyder said. "That didn't make us good enough to overcome the positions we put ourselves in. Nevertheless, I saw the intangible things there tonight. The youngsters played with some spirit, and I saw them play with some fight and they played hard."

During the game, the Cats had 28 first downs and racked up 369 total offensive yards in 90 plays. K-State had twice the possession time of the Aggies.

Late in the fourth quarter, the Cats attempted to make a comeback, as Meier connected with sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira from 18 yards out to make the score 35-30 with 3:50 to go in favor of Texas A&M.

On their next possession, the Aggies went three-and-out and the Cats regained the ball with 2:32 left in the game. However, after K-State turned the ball over on downs, another Aggie touchdown ended hopes of a comeback.

"Maybe we didn't take full advantage of all four downs," Snyder said. "That's hindsight, I guess."

Knight said she was very

Cargill CEO presents ethics lecture

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mismanagement and neglect were not causes of a recent spill at a phosphate facility in Florida, said Warren R. Staley, chairman and CEO of Cargill Inc.

"We can't control natural disasters," Staley said.

The spill is believed to have been caused by high winds and heavy rains during Hurricane Frances, one of four hurricanes to hit the area this season.

Staley was responding to questions posed by audience members who attended the College of Business Administration Business Ethics Lecture Series, sponsored by Cargill Inc.

"We plan our facilities based on 40 to 60-year weather patterns," he said. "This was outside any historical patterns."

Staley also dismissed any notion, as reported by some area newspapers, that the dikes at the facility were three feet below regulation.

During the speech, Staley said businesses, the media and citizens all are responsible for the tarnished images of major corporations today.

"Businesses need to earn trust, and society needs to bestow it appropriately," he said.

Separatists' bombings kill 7 in India

Target sites include crowded market, village tea plantation

By Wasbir Hussain
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GAUHATI, India — Suspected separatists bombed a crowded market, a tea plantation and other sites Sunday, killing seven people in a second day of explosions and gun attacks that have left at least 57 dead and more than 100 wounded in northeast India.

Troops patrolled the streets in Nagaland state to prevent further bloodshed, while the bombings continued in western Assam state.

The violence across the two states was some of the deadliest to hit the ethnic patchwork region, where more than three dozen insurgent groups have been active — including one of Asia's longest running separatist conflicts, dating to shortly before India gained independence from Britain in 1947.

In Sunday's deadliest attacks, a bomb exploded in the evening near a market in Bijni, 125 miles west of Gauhati, the capital of Assam, killing three people.

Shortly afterward, another explosion killed another man and wounded 25 in nearby Gauripur along India's border with Bangladesh.

In the same region, a bomb went off at a tea plantation in Borhat village, killing a worker and wounded two others, Press Trust of India news agency said.

And two suspected rebels of the outlawed National Democratic Front of Bodoland were killed when explosives they were carrying detonated in Assam's Sonitpur district, PTI said.

Federal Home Minister Shivraj Patil visited Assam and Nagaland on Sunday to assess the violence, which began Saturday when suspected separatists detonated a bomb at a packed railway station and sprayed gunfire into bustling markets. At least 50 people were killed in attacks Saturday.

No group claimed responsibility and it wasn't clear whether the nine attacks in Nagaland and Assam states were linked.

But Inspector-General Khagen Sarma, the top police official of Assam state, said he "cannot rule out" the possible involvement of the outlawed National Democratic Front of Bodoland, a tribal separatist group that is active in the region.

Sunday is the 18th anniversary of the group, which is demanding a homeland for Boroland, a region that straddles both states. On Friday, Assam Chief Minister Tarun Gogoi, the state's top elected official, offered a truce to the Boroland rebels and the region's largest insurgent group — the United Liberation front of Assam — beginning Oct. 16 if they accepted a cease-fire.

Nagaland has also been the scene of an insurgency that has killed 15,000 people since Naga rebels began fighting for a separate nation nearly six decades ago. The rebels want special status for Nagaland state, which borders Myanmar and where most of the 2 million Nagas — most Christians — live in predominantly Hindu India.

In other attacks in Assam state, a bomb went off in a market in Dhekiagula village, north of the capital, wounding 15 people, police said.

Rebels also hit a natural gas pipeline with a land mine near Borhat in western Assam, a police officer said on condition of anonymity. The total damage was unknown.

Another bomb exploded at a shop in Dabosal in western Assam, wounding its owner, said A.K. Bhutani, the district magistrate. And in the nearby town of Chitra, suspected militants blew up an electrical transmission tower, snapping the power supply to the area, Bhutani said.

English professor charged with murder in ex-wife's death

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State English professor has been charged with first-degree murder in connection with the death of his ex-wife.

Thomas E. Murray, 48, was arrested during a traffic stop at 8:45 a.m. Monday in connection with the death of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross-Murray last November at her Lawrence home. She was director of employee relations at K-State until 1997.

He now has been suspended with pay and is prohibited from contacting students and being on campus, university officials said Monday. Murray's bond is set at $1 million.

He was scheduled to appear in court at 3 p.m. on Monday in Douglas County.

Ross-Murray's body was found Nov. 14, 2003, in her home, north of Lawrence.

Murray originally was considered a suspect but then cleared as a suspect. Police investigated more than 170 other leads.

The district attorney's office declined to comment on what evidence led to Murray's arrest.

Murray was teaching two English courses this semester - American English and Linguistics for Teachers.

"They are temporarily being covered until more information is available," English Administrative Specialist Lisa Killer said. "Right now, our main concern is getting the classes covered."

Killer said department officials will wait for the legal process to continue before discussing Murray's spring 2005 course load.

J.D. Garber, a student in one of Murray's classes, said Murray did not show up for class at 9:30 a.m. Monday.

"We went and sat for 20 minutes, and nobody showed up, and there was no note on the board," said Garber, senior in education.

Garber said Murray previously indicated he was a single parent when talking about his family.

"The only thing he said about his personal life was he was a single parent and his kid was going through kindergarten," he said.

When he enrolled in the course, Garber said he knew of the accusations against the professor, however he was surprised about the arrest. Garber said the professor seemed preoccupied while teaching class.

"I was actually stunned, but I felt like there was something weird about the guy," Garber said. "He seemed spaced out

Car tunes

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cruising down Interstate 70 with Nelly blaring out the speakers is what Robert Bratt enjoys most. Bratt, a 19-year-old Junction City resident, enjoys the ride with the help of some pricey automotive modifications.

He is not alone.

Many young people are looking into bigger and better ways of jazzing up their cars, said Evan Zerby, president of Xpertinstaller, a local business selling mobile electronics at 111 McCall Road.

"The trends are just getting crazier and more exciting," he said.

There are many components to a great ride, but to Bratt, one in particular stands out.

"Sound - any good car must have amazing sound," he said. "That's what I work on with my Dodge."

Bratt said that for more than six months he has revamped all parts of his 1997 Dodge Dakota, ranging from a new CD player and amplifiers to the exhaust system.

"I like to baby my truck, in particular with the interior," he said. "I've spent about $5,000 on my car, and I plan on spending more."

Despite all the modifications, Bratt said it is important not to go overboard.

R.J. Frost, Manhattan High School senior, said he also enjoys pampering his vehicle, a 1996 Honda Civic Hatchback.

"My friends love my car," Frost said. "I have an internal DVD/CD player, 18-inch rims, and under-glows. It's just an exciting ride."

He said the ease with which Civics can be modified is what attracted him.

"Civics are awesome because they are easy to modify," Frost said. "I've done a little bit of everything on my car, excluding the engine."

He said he eventually plans to upgrade his engine.

"My car looks good enough, but just isn't fast enough," he said.

While he may not have the speed yet, Frost said he has invested quite a bit into the Civic.

Performance car stereo parts

Amplifier

An amplifier is a piece of electronic equipment that increases strength of signals passing through it. The music is sent to a speaker through a signal; an amplifier takes that signal and increases its power so it can be played louder.

Speakers

A speaker is an electro-acoustic transducer that converts electrical signals into sounds loud enough to be heard at a distance. These are the main components of a stereo that produces sound.

Subwoofer

A subwoofer is a larger speaker that creates a deeper bass than conventional speakers would provide. Because of their size, subwoofers usually are encased in wood boxes and stored in the trunk.

Capacitor

Capacitors store the necessary power that amplifiers need to punch larger bass notes while limiting clipping. They store energy during intervals when it is not required, which is most of the time, and release it when demand exceeds what is available from the car's power system.

Watch party set for vice presidential debate

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first debate is over, and Vice President Dick Cheney has some catching up to do.

Cheney and Democratic vice presidential candidate John Edwards will face off at 8 tonight in a 90-minute debate moderated by Gwen Ifill, a senior correspondent of "The NewsHour" and "Washington Week" on PBS.

"I think Vice President Cheney believes that he needs to build up the Bush image after the president's poor debate, so I think he will go after John Kerry and Sen. Edwards," David Procter, professor of speech, said. "John Edwards will continue to press aggressively on the perceived failures of the administration."

Four years ago, voters felt the Bush-Gore race was getting too nasty, Procter said, so vice presidential candidates Cheney and Joe Lieberman agreed to a gentlemanly debate.

However, this year it could get personal.

"Vice President Cheney was CEO of Halliburton for a long time, and Halliburton has become a symbol of corruption and cronyism," Procter said. "Just like you heard John Kerry talk about his Vietnam War service, you can be sure John Edwards is going to talk about Dick Cheney and Halliburton. It's this negative image of this administration."

In return, Cheney will most likely attack Edwards' youth.

"I am positive that the vice president is going to argue that John Edwards is inexperienced, and the implied result of that is he is not qualified to be president if that should come to pass," Procter said.

Senior Bush Adviser Mary Matalin said Cheney will deliver Bush's message.

"He's going to make the arguments that Bush made," she said. "He's not breaking away from where the president is."

Kerry's campaign advisers said Edwards will press Cheney on the bloodiness of the war in Iraq.

"Can Dick Cheney honestly look the American people in the eye and say that he and President Bush and the rest of the administration would have done absolutely nothing differently?" said Susan Rice, a foreign policy adviser to Kerry-Edwards.

And just as in the first debate between Bush and Kerry, candidates will be analyzed on body language and response to their opponent, however there is a

Civilian murder charges dropped against soldiers

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLAY CENTER, Kan. - Murder charges against two Fort Riley soldiers were dismissed Monday, clearing the way for action by military attorneys.

A motion filed by Clay County District Attorney Doug Martin was granted, dismissing charges of first-degree murder and attempted first-degree murder against Sgts. Aaron Stanley and Eric Colvin. The two were transferred Friday from Clay Center Kan., to Junction City, pending action by military attorneys.

Fort Riley spokeswoman Sam Robinson said military charges against Stanley, 22, of Bismarck, N.D., and Colvin, 23, of Papillion, Neb., were expected to be filed later this week. They are being held in connection with the shooting deaths of Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif., and Spc. Christopher D. Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo.

All four soldiers were part of 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry based at Fort Riley. Approximately 750 soldiers from the unit are serving their second tour of duty in Iraq.

Four other soldiers, also with Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, have been charged in Iraq by the military with the murders of four Iraqi civilians.

READERS' ADVOCATE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

When you look at the amount of news, features and editorials versus the amount of advertisement space in the Collegian, one wonders whether we are trying to give information to our readers or sell a newspaper.

Well, actually we are trying to do both.

We are trying to get a lot of information to the readers through our columns and stories. To do that we have to have a way to pay for the pages.

Ad sales come from people and business out in the community that see our paper as an avenue to get their products to our readers.

The Collegian has a whole staff dedicated to ads, marketing and design of the advertisements in the paper.

The Collegian and phone-book advertising accounts for 61 percent of the total income for Student Publications Inc.

"On a daily basis, we try to maintain 42 percent of our paper in ad sales in order to cover our expenses. The number of ads sold for that specific day always determines the size of the paper," Advertising Manager Lindsay Burger said.

Twenty-seven percent of the Collegian budget comes from Student Governing Association to cover operating and equipment funds. In 2005, that will be $376,995.

Advertising is the backbone of the Collegian and of most magazines and newspapers across the country. Advertisements are also just another form of information that we as a paper have to deliver to the reader.

The Collegian strives to give its readers a mixture of stories and opinions. And the better our paper, the more our clients want to advertise.

Collegian revenues:

- SGA fees: 27 percent
- Advertising, et al: 73 percent

QUICK QUIZ

Are you physically fit?

1. When you're not at work or in class, you:

- A. Are at the Rec, sticking it to the Stairmaster.
- B. Study at Hale Library.
- C. Watch reruns of "Three's Company" in your underwear and downing a pint of Ben and Jerry's.

2. Your favorite meal consists of:

- A. A powerbar and a bottle of water — bottled at the source, of course — none of that tap water stuff.
- B. A McDonald's shake for breakfast, one for lunch and a sensible dinner.
- C. Anything deep-fried that comes in a paper bag.

3. When you walk across campus in the morning:

- A. You don't walk — you jog. You're so well-known for it you have jogging groupies who join you.
- B. You ride your bike and enjoy the breeze.
- C. You leave your house an hour early because you know you'll be short-winded from chain-smoking on your way to class.

4. If you were a type of fruit, you'd be:

- A. An apple — firm on the outside but sweet and enjoyable at the same time.
- B. A lemon — bitter but delicious with iced tea.
- C. A pear — the shape of your body.

5. Your favorite sport is:

- A. Football.
- B. Racquetball.
- C. Synchronized M&M alphabetization.

If you answered mostly A, you're a hardcore health nut. Your total body fat hovers somewhere between 0 and 5 percent.

If you answered mostly B, you've probably achieved a good balance between regular exercise, activities and a healthy diet.

If you answered mostly C, we'd suggest you run to Lafene Health Center and seek some help, but the exertion may cause you to collapse en route. Take a good, hard look at your routines, and you'll be on your way to staying physically fit.

New diversity, career development director hired

By U. Bhagavathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Office of Diversity and dual Career Development has hired a new director.

The position entails making multicultural students on campus feel more welcome at K-State.

Mirta Chavez, wa selected for the position, is the former director of enrollment management at Seward Community College.

Chavez is the new director of multicultural programs and services, a campus-wide position for promoting access to multicultural organizations.

K-State has always dedicated itself to academic excellence and enhancing multicultural diversity. The philosophy of the university helps it embrace students and faculty from various socio-cultural backgrounds, Myra Gordon, associate provost of Diversity and Dual Career Development, said.

"The position seems very interesting and it gives me the opportunity to interact with many student organizations. I'm looking forward to taking upon the challenge of coordinating the activities of the various associations on campus," Chavez said.

Gordon said she is excited about working with Chavez.

"I am delighted that we had the good fortune to have a person like Ms. Chavez," Gordon said. "I can't think of a more suitable person to relate to our multi-cultural students and play an integral role in retaining them."

Chavez is an alumni of Fort Hays State University, where she was a graduate student in counseling in 1998 after getting her bachelor's degree in psychology in 1995.

Chavez received the Ethnic Minority Alumni Award of Excellence in 1999 from Fort Hays for outstanding achievement and exemplary citizenship. She is a member of the Junior Leadership Liberal Board and has served on the Regent Committee on Promoting Enrollment for Students with Diverse Backgrounds for the Kansas State Board of Regents in 2001.

"With the population of multicultural students increasing it is important for us to be responsive to the changing demographics," Gordon said. "We are working hard to make K-State a multi-cultural Mecca of education. There has to be diversity of faculty, the student body and the curriculum."

Chavez said she can work effectively with students.

"I have a passion for working with students and am looking forward to working with students from so many diverse backgrounds," she said.

K-State plans national exchange

Students able to study at other U.S. universities for same price

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Starting next fall, K-State students can participate in the national student exchange.

Students can travel to universities outside Kansas, and study, said Julie Lebo, study abroad adviser. This is part of the National Student Exchange program.

She said this would allow K-State students to transfer to other universities listed on the NSE Exchange sites.

Lebo said the program would give students an opportunity to take courses not offered at K-State but they would still only pay the in-state tuition at K-State.

The program was predominantly for undergraduate students, who had a GPA of more than 2.5 and were taking at least 30 hours, she said.

Lebo said depending on the program of choice, some students might need to have a higher GPA.

Students could transfer to other schools for up to a year and places were given based on availability, she said.

Further information can be obtained at the office of international programs and also by visiting the website www.nse.org, she said.

"I want lots of students to come to us. We want them to go places. These experiences are priceless," Lebo said.

Kenneth Holland, associate provost in the office of international programs, said that students still could make use of any scholarships or other financial aid available.

He added that the office is working to develop an honors program that would help students financially.

Holland said in addition to the office, students also would receive guidance from academic advisers in deciding their courses to effectively utilize the program.

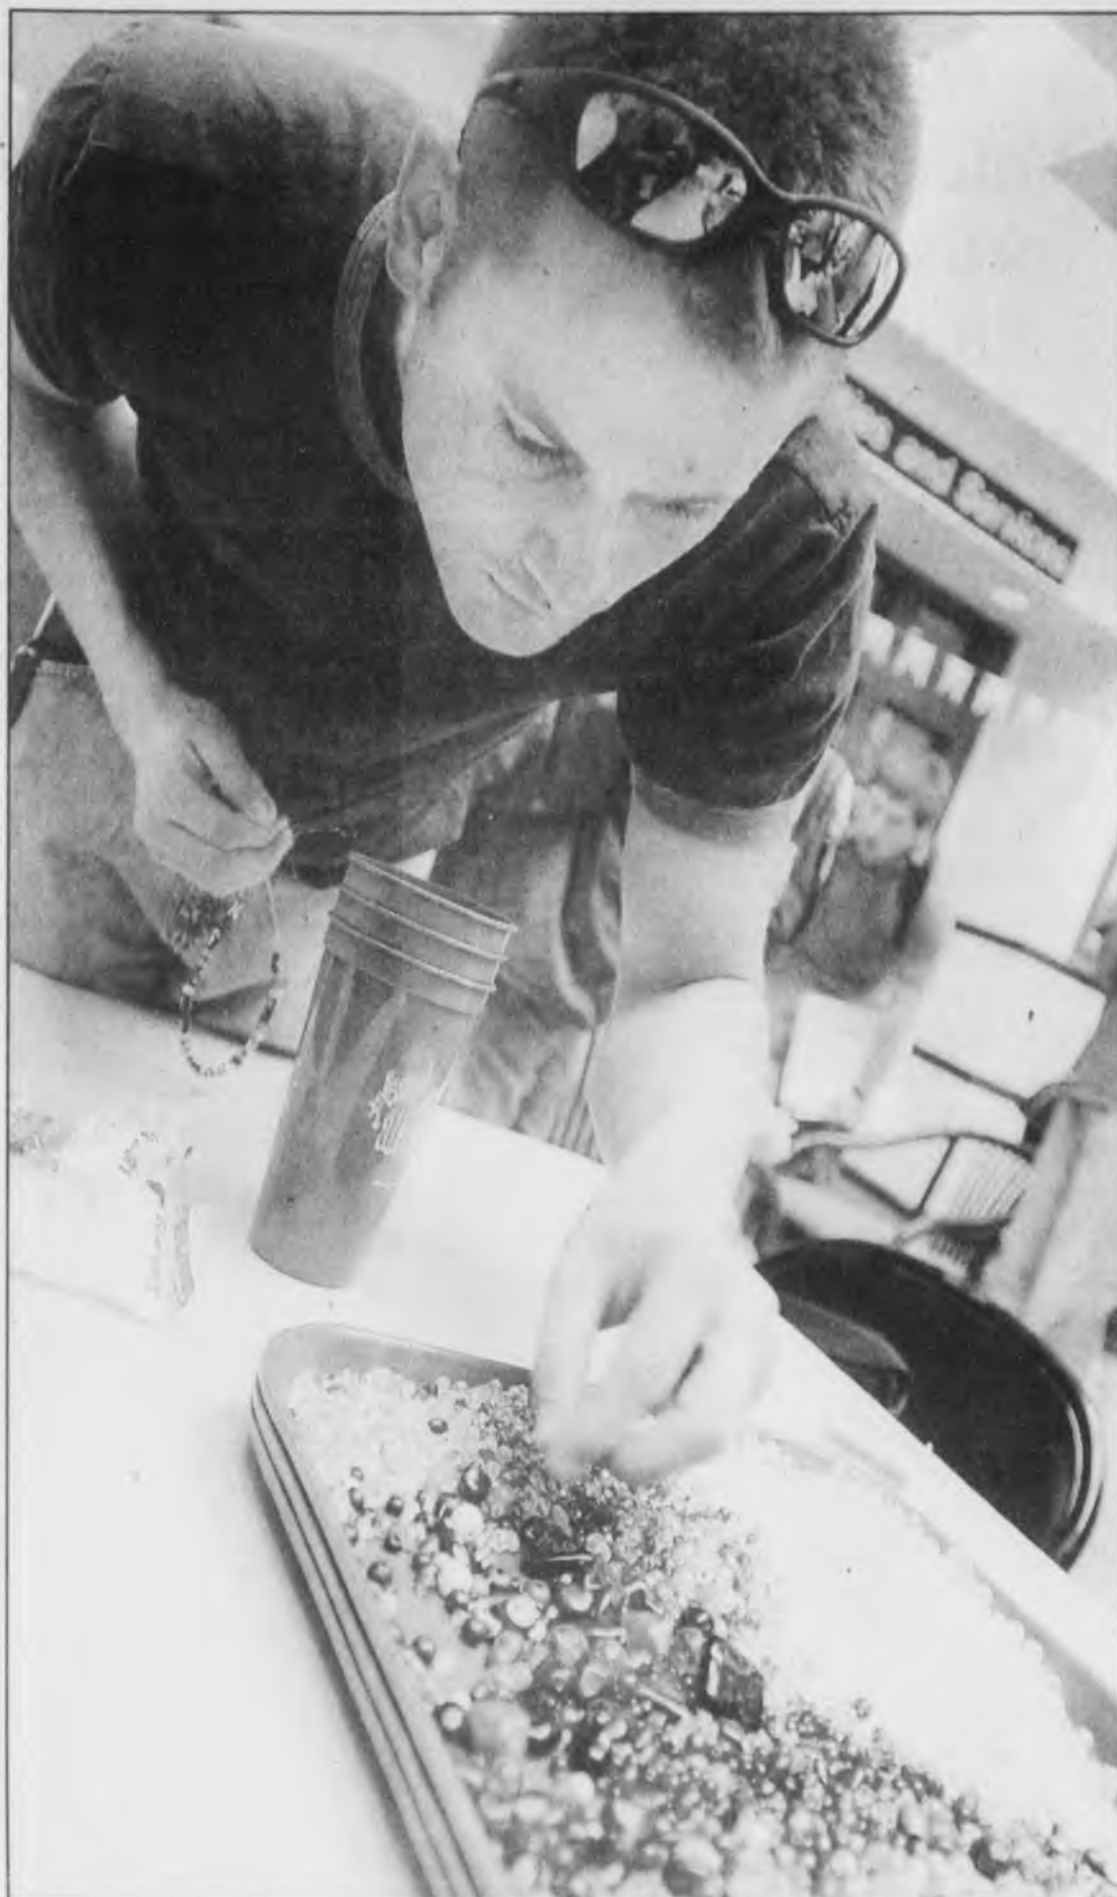

"It is a great opportunity for K-State students and can lead to tremendous growth," Holland said.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said the program brought students from around the country to K-State.

She said student exchange is a great way for students who did not want to study in another country or did not know a foreign language to diversify their college experience.

"I think the program provides valuable learning opportunities across the country and gives students a chance to see other parts of the United States," she said.

TO THE POINT Voters should focus on most vital issues

People vote for many different reasons. Some do it out of a sense of civic responsibility. Others do it as a protest of the current administration or the way their family usually votes and many people vote based on their religious beliefs and moral values.

Whatever the case, members of the community who register and plan to vote should evaluate the numerous races and issues on ballots for their merits.

Far too often, campaigns focus on wedge issues that have little effect on the population as a whole – abortion and gay marriage are among the most prominent.

While financial woes continue to plague the state in countless areas – education being most vital to students – candidates rarely can provide adequate time to these issues before being caught up in less-vital wedge issue debates.

When politicians tackle wedge issues and policy change occurs, the electorate is divided and rights are curtailed.

Community members heading to the polls this fall should acquaint themselves with the issues most important to their lives and families.

Allowing politicians and interest groups to set agendas only will advance issues important to them, not those in the best interests of the community.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Remember in fifth grade when we learned about AIDS? Have you thought about it since then?

If not, you should.

HIV and AIDS are the new reality, even in Kansas. According to AIDS Action, in 2002 there were 386 adults with HIV and 1,018 adults with full blown AIDS living in Kansas.

The scary part is not that AIDS made its way to the heart of America, but that so many Kansans are blissfully ignorant of the fact.

We like to believe that every small town boy we've slept with really was a virgin or that the two or three other guys she dated were magically disease free.

We tell our partners we have no sexually transmitted diseases because we haven't had any strange rashes and we feel fine.

And our idealism and optimism is killing us.

An example: while it generally takes eight to 10 years for HIV to develop into AIDS, in 2002, 57 percent of new HIV cases in Kansas developed into AIDS within one year.

That means we're not catching the disease until the late stages and missing opportunities to stop its transmission. It means those being diagnosed with HIV probably have had it for years.

It also means there are hundreds, if not thousands, of Kansans infected with HIV who don't even know it and probably won't for a long time.

In recent years, there has been a decrease in the number of reported cases of HIV/AIDS in Kansas. Don't let this apparent bit of sunshine fool you; it's most likely due to a decrease in testing and not a decrease in the spread of the disease.

One indication of this is a recent spike in cases of syphilis, a sexually transmitted disease that may increase the likelihood of HIV transmission. Increases in STD infections reflect an increase in unprotected sex, which is the primary method of exposure to HIV in Kansas.

Translation: more people are having unprotected sex and as a result, more people are probably contracting and spreading HIV.

You might think since you're not an intravenous drug using homosexual male, you're not at risk. But you are – even the ladies.

According to the Kansas Department of Health, 40 percent of regional HIV cases are female, and 38.5 percent diagnosed in our region between 2000 and 2002 had none of the traditional risk factors such as homosexual or unprotected sex or intravenous drug use.

That means the largest risk factor for HIV in this area is "question mark." We don't know how these people were exposed to HIV. And that should scare the bejeezus out of you.

If you're sexually active, you are at risk. You need to be tested, no matter how trustworthy or pure you think your previous partners were.

Yes, it's embarrassing to tell the nice lady at the doctor's office that you want an HIV test.

But if you're grown up enough to be having sex and taking on the risks it entails, you can get tested for STDs.

The nurses at Lafene Health Center aren't your parents; they know you're having sex, and they aren't there to judge you. They want you to be healthy.

Early detection and treatment can slow the progress of this disease and add years to your life, choosing to live in ignorance because you're scared of what that test may reveal is asinine.

You're an adult. Act like one.

Don't wait until you need to explain to a loved one that you've infected them with HIV.

LOGAN ADAMS

Logan Adams criticizes the dirty politics of the race for the second congressional seat.

It's time to fight terror with our wallets.

Last Thursday the two presidential candidates debated our national security.

Interestingly enough, neither candidate mentioned one of the simplest and most effective ways to fight terror: de-investing.

Foreign Policy magazine argued America's power comes from two main sources: our military might and economic power.

America has done plenty with our military might, but we failed to bring the full power and weight down on terror with our economy.

Ask any cynic, and she or he might tell you the world turns on a dime. Money today is very powerful indeed.

Many countries around the world have become addicted to foreign investment to help fuel their economic expansion.

In fact, when countries threaten to stop investing, the recipient government can actually be put under such economic strain they are forced out of power.

Twenty years ago, a U.S.-lead campaign denied South Africa the investment on which it relied. Because of that, not only was apartheid ended, but the government itself fell.

No one denies the power of the American dollar. But in the war on terror, we have yet to bring our greenback broadsides to bear.

According to a recent report from the Center for Security Policy, a think tank, in the top 100 public pension programs alone (such as Kansas' KPERS), U.S. workers have more than $200 billion invested in corporations that invest in countries on the State Department's list of terrorist sponsors, such as Syria or Iran.

According to the Los Angeles Times, by investing in companies that invest in terror-sponsoring countries, we enable terror.

The investments fuel economic growth, which enables the local economy to fund terrorist organizations through donations or through use of increased tax revenue to pay for state sponsored terror.

Frank Gaffney, president of the Center for Security Policy, explains that investing in companies dealing with terror sponsoring states is more than just aiding their country.

The act of investing alone provides "moral cover" for the nations actions.

We as Americans have the ability to de-invest in terror.

As students who will soon enter the workforce, or as people already in it, asking questions about who your pension plan invests in is the first step. Take Kansas for example.

According to the Center for Security Policy's report, Kansas' KPERS' has more than $952 million invested in more than 160 companies that invest in terror-sponsoring states.

One hundred and twenty-one companies invest in Iran, 11 invest in North Korea, and 45 invest in Syria. The total worth of the companies' projects in terror-sponsoring states totals more than $24 billion.

The good news is action can be easily taken. The Rocky Mountain News reported that when New York City's police and firefighters found their pensions invested in terror, they immediately took action, and they no longer invest in such companies.

Besides denying terror money or moral cover, we can take a step forward as well with our investments.

The Independent in London points out that investing in nations that recently helped us with our war on terror or helped stop nuclear proliferation, such as Libya, will send an even more important lesson.

Taking notice of where we put our money is a simple but powerful concept; aid your allies, and do not aid your foes.

And who knows, if enough states change their investments, then our dough may begin to reap our biggest return of all: Throwing governments that support terror out of power, bloodlessly.

Relieving third-world debt improves conditions

THE DAILY CAMPUS
U. CONNECTICUT

STORRS, Conn. — International media services have been frenzied over Britain's announcement recent to null debt owed to it by all of the third world country.

Britain is owed approximately 10 percent of all debt owed by third world countries, and is proposing a plan to relieve it all.

The move is led by Gordon Brown, the chair of the International Monetary Fund and a politician who has always supported resolving the problem of debt owed by poorer nations.

Some people have said the move is not a complete solution to the many problems facing the third world, but it is certainly a step in the right direction.

If these poorer nations are relieved of some debt then they will be able to strengthen their economies and social structure.

Debt is a major problem for third world nations because it stifles economies and perpetuates poverty. Africa especially has been oppressed by over $200 billion in foreign owed debt.

The debt keeps them from funding social investments such as health, education, drinking water and other vital programs.

The cancellation of debt is one proposed solution to allow third world nations to concentrate on internal crises.

Announcement comes before major meetings of the IMF, where representatives of the developed world will be challenged by Britain to match offer to cancel the massive debts.

If the developed world, hopefully including the United States, France, Japan and Germany, follows suit it could be unprecedentedly influential in giving the undeveloped world new opportunities to better their situations. Already, France and Canada are expected to make similar announcements.

It is difficult to argue with the infallible logic of economics. It is a social validation: one person has done something deemed worthy of compensation and now is owed a comparable amount of compensation by others. It is defined by the old adage, "There's no such thing as a free lunch."

Britain, however, has given third world country its free lunch and hopefully these countries will be able to capitalize on this uncommon opportunity.

The actions of the British government are more than commendable, they are heroic. If Britain succeeds in setting the precedent of abolishing debt, and pressures other nations into following suit, the international community will never be the same.

If this happens, more than ever before, the third world will have an opportunity to develop past its current and past potential.

It is an unprecedented step away from the Darwinian nature of the state system and in the name of humanity itself.

TO THE EDITOR

Use of study files could violate Honor System

Editor,

What better time than Integrity Week, to bring a current academic integrity issue to the attention of the university community for discussion and resolution?

Last spring the Honor System investigated a case in which it was alleged that final exam answers were being distributed to numerous students enrolled in a large lecture class.

The investigation which ensued eventually led to the determination that the exam answers came from one or more Greek house "test files" or "study files," although how the exam answers arrived there was not determined.

As the investigation progressed, many of the suspected students who had made use of this information claimed not to be aware that the exam answers were considered unauthorized aid.

The students' assumption seemed to be that if the information was in the study files, it must be OK to use it.

Following the termination of the investigation, the Office of Greek Affairs inquired of the Honor System office whether the use of Greek "test files" or "study files" would be considered a violation of the Honor Pledge and consequently a violation of trust between students and faculty.

Our answer was simply that it depends on whether the information in the study files was freely and knowingly provided to students by a faculty member who had the authority to do so.

Upon further reflection, however, we decided to offer more specific guidelines for study files in an attempt to delineate authorized study materials from unauthorized study materials, whether the study guides were generated by roommates or by a living group.

Study files could properly include course syllabi, descriptions of course assignments, any quiz, test or exam which is freely returned to the student by the instructor for use as a study guide.

Study files should not include any quiz, test or exam not authorized for use by an instructor, any completed assignment for a grade (including a quiz, test, or exam) by an individual student, or any completed assignment for a grade by a student group.

There is nothing wrong with assembling and making use of study files.

It is important, however, that those files exist within clearly established guidelines so that the academic integrity of the university is maintained, but more importantly, that the trust between faculty and students be recognized as essential to the university experience.

Singapore's weight-loss plan segregates children

THE PITT NEWS
U. PITTSBURGH

PITTSBURGH — There were few things during childhood so sweet as watching the clock tick to noon and running to the blacktop to grab the red kickball, skip double-Dutch or create a disgusting sweat during a game you'd only just invented. There were familiar faces at recess: the girls giggling; the soccer players; and, of course, the fat kid.

But, in Singapore, there are no fat kids at recess. As part of a government program to fight the country's growing obesity problem, schools segregate the fat kids. Rather than go to recess, they go to mandatory exercise programs until they lose weight.

This program includes preservative-free school lunches and meetings with parents to discuss nutrition. It is largely a good thing — though segregating fat kids isn't — and a far more active program than any we have here.

Recent studies find a minimum 15 percent of American children are obese. Comparatively, Singapore has a childhood obesity rate of about 10 percent.

But stigmatizing children by putting them in a special "fat class" isn't the way to battle obesity. It might encourage them to lose weight, but it does so by social stigma, which shatters self-esteem. Overweight children are already less happy than their peers; Singapore shouldn't compound their problems by alienating them.

And what about the children who, by genetics, are inalterably fat? People do exploit that excuse, but those on the heavy side of the bell curve shouldn't be cajoled into changing what nature determines to be their ideal body weights.

The United States began fighting obesity, albeit tentatively, with the new nutrition pyramid and schools' banning vending machines. The National Academies' Institute of Medicine released suggestions on battling obesity Thursday, suggesting many of the guidelines the program in Singapore already follows.

We must ensure American children are both healthy and happy.

Columnist's defensive attitude lacks substance

Editor,

Well, I'm not foaming at the mouth... but I am wondering whether Jonas Hogg's column in Monday's Collegian had any point.

I gather that he is upset about "some academics" who, from his perspective, "feel the need to exert control over what goes in the paper" and wants them to know that "absolutely no one cares."

Freedom of the press is an important issue.

But there was nothing in Mr. Hogg's editorial that enabled me to think about whatever it is that is happening.

All I learned is that Mr. Hogg is angry, decided to communicate with "some academics" through a public forum rather than face-to-face, and relied upon put-downs and insults to make the point that he didn't care.

Well, I do care — I care a great deal about the student "voice" in the university. But I personally find this type of journalism arrogant, self-indulgent, and pointless.

Can't we do better?

Senior tight end balances academic, physical tasks

BEYOND THE SPORT

This is the first installment in a five-part series profiling the challenges involved in being a successful student-athlete at K-State.

In coming weeks: Miles from home — A profile on freshman libero Angie Lastra of the K-State volleyball team.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the world of major college athletics, the concept of "student-athlete" is often reversed. Athletes too often get caught up in the sport they play, and forget about their duty to earn a college degree. The "athlete-student" loses sight of what their goal should be — a college education.

Brian Casey, a senior tight end for the K-State football team, is a student-athlete.

Now in his fifth year at K-State, Casey has taken what it means to be a student-athlete, and molded his own life around certain principles: a dedication to academics, athletics and the balance between the two.

Casey said keeping the balance is difficult, especially now that he is a graduate student in accounting.

"That makes it a little tougher since the grad school classes are harder," Casey said. "You get used to it after a while. I've been here five years so it's gotten easier over that time."

After a breakout year in football in 2003, Casey was named honorable mention All-Big 12 by conference coaches and the Associated Press. He came into the 2004 season considered one of the top tight ends in the nation.

Many look at the athletic honors he has achieved and say he is a gifted athlete.

As true as that might be, for everything he has done on the field, Casey has earned more honors when the pads are off.

In each of the last three seasons, Casey was named first-team Academic All-Big 12.

Casey said he appreciates the acknowledgement of the hard work he has put into his education.

"It's a good honor, because I have been taking my academics pretty seriously my whole life, through high school and college," Casey said. "To be recognized as one of the top people in the Big 12 is a pretty good honor."

Not only does Casey battle some of the best athletes in the nation as well as graduate school classes, the senior is also raising a family.

His wife Wendy, who holds the task of taking care of their son, Brett, while Brian is away at school or at practice, said it can be overwhelming at times, but she is making the necessary sacrifices in order to help Brian become the best student and athlete possible.

Brian Casey, shown here during the Fresno State game on Sept. 11, is not only a member of the football team but also a husband, father and graduate student in accounting. In 2003, Casey was named both an honorable mention All-Big 12 tight end and Academic All-Big 12.

"It's difficult at times because he's gone a lot, but we work through it and it all works out for the best," Wendy said. "I just have to get used to the fact that he is gone a lot. He needs to do well in school, so that he has something to fall back on if nothing happens with football."

Brian said his wife is incredible for what she has given up for him to be able to play football and get an education.

"She helps me out, and she knows that football and school is why I'm here at K-State," he said. "My wife does a great job. This is the last year and after this, I'll be more helpful to her."

Phil Hughes, associate director of athletics for student services, is in charge of making sure student-athletes get the help necessary to complete their degree.

With the added pressure of playing a Division I sport, academic support is something athletic departments all across the country focus on.

Hughes said it is an athletic department's job to repay the time the athletes give to the school by making sure a degree is attainable.

cient and effective studiers possible is the primary charge for the support system," Hughes said. "The best thing we can do to support that student is give back time and study skills and mental organization."

At K-State, a system of tutors is in place to help student-athletes keep up with their schoolwork. The athletes are also required to meet with their academic advisors, just like any other student.

Hughes said with Casey, the drive and will to succeed was already in place when he got to K-State.

"With Brian in particular, he is motivated," Hughes said. "He's obviously bright and motivated, but that's not enough to succeed at the level that he has. He has a tenacity and a perseverance."

Casey said he appreciates what K-State has done for him academically.

"If you ever need help in any classes, they'll be there to help you," he said. "They help you out a lot."

With the football season almost half over, Casey's days as a student-athlete at K-State are dwindling. He will continue his graduate courses, and wait to see if the NFL comes calling at next year's draft.

Hughes said Casey is a special kind of athlete, one that does what it takes to be successful in anything he does.

"When you're talking about elite athletes, Olympic-caliber athletes, who have invested incredible amounts of time and energy into their skills and into their sport, it would seem natural that the priorities get skewed," Hughes said. "When you add other emotional and parental requirements, you hope there is enough maturity there to deal with the challenges of being those things."

"Brian Casey has that maturity and there is a toughness and a tenacity and a perseverance about Brian and many others that is remarkable, and that has allowed him to succeed."

CFB | Kansas/Missouri rivalry changes name

The spirited rivalry between the universities of Missouri and Kansas, which traces its roots to the Civil War, will retire the name "Border War" out of respect for American troops fighting overseas, the schools said Monday.

The sponsored contest between the two schools, decided by head-to-head competition in common sports during an academic year, will now be called the "Border Showdown."

Volleyball | Tickets available for KU match

Despite an announced sellout, K-State volleyball fans can still purchase tickets for Wednesday's match pitting No. 15 K-State against No. 24 Kansas in Lawrence.

A limited number of tickets are available through the K-State Ticket Office, the K-State Department of Athletics announced Monday. Fans interested in buying tickets should call (800) 221-CATS.

The match is slated for a 7 p.m. start at the Horejsi Center.

Football | Oklahoma game placed on six-day ready list

The Oct. 16 K-State/Oklahoma football is one step closer to a national broadcast on ABC.

According to the K-State Department of Athletics, ABC Sports and the Big 12 selected the game as one of three conference games on the network's six-day ready list in the running for two slots on ABC that Saturday.

Missouri at Texas and Texas A&M at Oklahoma State are the other two contests ABC selected for a six-day option.

The option means K-State will not be able to announce a kickoff time for the Oklahoma game until Oct. 10.

If the game is not chosen by ABC it will likely end up airing on Fox Sports Net at 6 p.m. on Oct. 16.

WTEN | Rosenberg's run ends in Los Angeles

Senior

K-State tennis player Maria Rosenberg fell just short of advancing to the quarterfinal round at the Riviera/All-American in Los Angeles.

Rosenberg

lost 6-2, 6-1 to Zsuzana Fodor of Mississippi State in the final pre-qualifying round at the tournament Monday morning.

The match was Rosenberg's fifth in four days, as the senior knocked off Chelsey Thompson of Cal Poly, Nika Koukhartchouk of Mississippi and Lauren Archer of Duke to reach the final pre-qualifying round.

Next up for Rosenberg and the rest of the K-State tennis team is the Hoosier Classic Oct. 8-10 in Bloomington, Ind.

Dodgers shed underdog status for playoff run

ANTHONY MENDOZA

This wasn't supposed to happen this year.

I was supposed to be embarrassed to wear my Los Angeles Dodgers gear.

Southern California fans were turning their back on blue and supposed to "think red instead." The Los Angeles market was supposed to embrace the Anaheim Angels as the "A-Team" and maverick-owner Arte Moreno, who was willing to throw money around at free agents and lower beer prices at the concession stands.

All the while their big brothers up the freeway were standing pat with a team that had underachieved since 1996, while looking for someone to buy a once-proud franchise from the FOX Corporation.

The Dodgers were turning into a small-market team in the second-largest market in the nation, similar to what the Los Angeles Lakers have become since the trade of Shaquille O'Neal.

They wore the blue and white but were resembling a team with the same colors playing in Kansas City, and that is what I expected them to be this year — a horrible team.

That is why on Saturday night, while K-State fans were mourning the football loss to Texas A&M and the end of the Heisman hype for Darren Sproles, I was celebrating.

Celebrating, because for the first time in eight years, there is a reason for me to watch baseball in October.

It also didn't hurt that the Dodgers knocked the San Francisco Giants out of the playoffs either; it just made it even sweeter.

Trailing 3-0 going into the bottom of the ninth inning, what happened next already occurred 25 times prior this season. Los Angeles won in its last at bat.

The Dodgers scored seven runs, capped off by a game-winning grand slam by Steve Finley that brought back memories of Kirk Gibson and the 1988 World Series.

It was a Hollywood finish — minus Finley coming out of the tunnel of the dugout barely able to swing like Gibson, and then hitting perhaps the greatest home run of all-time off the best closer of his era.

Today, the Dodgers play the St. Louis Cardinals, who are by far the best team in baseball this year.

St. Louis has three potential MVP candidates in its lineup, and one through six, the Cardinals batting order is loaded.

Pair that with solid pitching and one of the best closers in baseball; St. Louis should roll to the championship.

But don't count out the Dodgers.

This year, LA has a cohesive team built around pitching and defense and one superstar, Adrian Beltre, who should win the MVP like Gibson did in 1988.

Usually the sequel is a failure, but this one has been in production for sixteen years, and it is destined to have a fairy-tale ending.

An ending that could only be produced under the lights and glamour of a Hollywood setting where the underdog rises up and takes down the giant.

Legendary album satisfies

Album review by Matt Groneman

Brian Wilson once said that music is the voice of God.

"Smile," the great unreleased album from the peak of his time with the Beach Boys, begins with an incantation called "Our Prayer" that consists of voices harmonizing as they move constantly up scales, moving their voices closer to heaven.

"Smile" was the brainchild of manic-depressive genius songwriter/producer Brian Wilson and drugged-out lyrical hipster Van Dyke Parks. The idea was to create a unique sonic representation of Americana, and that is exactly what "Smile" does.

In 1967 the album was set to come out, but due to Brian Wilson's personal doubts after hearing the Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" he decided that "Smile" wasn't good enough and did not deserve to be released. Some songs came out from time to time, but usually in altered inferior versions, but most of the tapes were indefinitely shelved.

In 2001 Brian Wilson went out on a "Pet Sounds" 35th anniversary tour with young British pop band, the Wondermints.

Eventually, the new band renewed Wilson's creative energies. An album of new material was released earlier this year, and "Smile" was rerecorded using the new band to meet Brian Wilson's expectations.

How does the group sound? Exuberant and brilliant.

While the Wondermints don't quite have the harmonic talents of the Wilson brothers, they come very close to matching the Beach Boys' ethereal voices. Brian Wilson's voice has changed slightly and become a little more inflected, but the quality has not diminished.

Of the previously released songs, many of these recordings sound crisper than the versions the Beach Boys released in the late 1960s. The version of "Heroes and Villains" on "Smile," originally a good but not terribly remarkable single from the 1967 album "Smiley Smile," sounds like the best thing Brian Wilson was ever involved with.

The only flaw in the album is in "Good Vibrations." On "Smile" Brian has revised the lyrics, or perhaps they were changed after "Smile" was scrapped and these are the original lyrics.

The original lyrics were fresh and incredibly romantic, whereas the new lyrics are vague and devoid of romance. Still, there's not much room for criticism, and Brian's aim at capturing Americana is revealed everywhere.

"Barnyard" features the sounds of farm animals and lyrics about them dancing while "Cabin Essence" is about, among other things, wheat fields, railroads and the Grand Coulee Dam.

And you can't criticize an album whose credits include musicians playing the hammer, celery and power drill.

Ups and downs

Caffeine has its positive and negative aspects

By Matt Groneman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Whether trying to wake up or stay awake, caffeine is an integral part of many students' lives.

Kristen Cavallaro, junior in biology and pre-nursing, said she drinks coffee daily.

"Not more than a medium coffee, usually," she said.

She said her coffee schedule helps her stay awake for class.

"I have to have it in the mornings with early classes," Cavallaro said. "I don't drink coffee at night."

She said she enjoys sitting in Radina's coffee shop where she drinks a double-skinny yerba latte, one of many caffeine-free drinks available to patrons.

Some people don't drink as much caffeine as Cavallaro. Jennifer Hardy, freshman in speech and language pathology, said she uses a relatively small amount of caffeine.

Hardy said she drinks soda and never notices the effects of caffeine.

"I usually have one or less a day," Hardy said. "I don't really think about the caffeine."

According to Wikipedia, soda has less caffeine than coffee: soft drinks only contain three to eight milligrams of caffeine per ounce as opposed to four to 20 milligrams per ounce in coffee.

Linda Yarrow, doctoral student in human nutrition and registered and licensed dietitian, said a moderate coffee drinker imbibes 200-300 milligrams of caffeine a day.

"The national average is 200 milligrams per day."

Yarrow said three cups of coffee a day is normal, or two cups if caffeine is also coming from other sources, such as chocolate, tea or soda.

Yarrow said caffeine is more of a habit than an addiction.

"Addiction usually interferes in negative ways in a person's social life," Yarrow said. "There is not much of a health risk if the person knows their response to the caffeine."

Coffee can help students stay up for studying purposes, Yarrow said.

"Caffeine can increase reaction time and motor skills," she said. "But if they are sensitive to the effect that they can't sleep, it will harm their test taking skills more than help them."

The main problem with caffeine is that it interrupts sleeping patterns. The average person needs between six and eight hours of sleep, Yarrow said.

She said staying up late one night might not be harmful, but that the loss of sleep builds up over time.

"Staying up for a Friday test starting on Monday causes a cumulative loss of sleep," she said.

The health risks associated with caffeine are minimal, Yarrow said.

"Caffeine causes a short term increase in blood pressure, but it is no more than what you would get from walking up stairs," she said.

A myth about caffeine is that it can cause osteoporosis in women, but Yarrow said there is "no direct correlation."

It may be best to take Cavallaro's advice about her coffee drinking habits.

"It's moderation it's not extremely harmful," she said. "Though if I miss it, I feel less motivated to be productive."

Doom's multiple collaborations sound a hit

"Madvillainy"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Collaborations between rappers and beat-makers have been the foundation of hip-hop.

However, if there is poor communication between two individuals, inferior beats to support the rapper or standard raps over mad beats, the music can flounder.

Fortunately, none of these were a problem with the collaboration between beat-maker Madlib (aka Lord Quas, Yesterday's New Quintet) and MF Doom (aka Metalface, Viktor Vaughn, King Geedorah).

The album only picks up steam from this point on. One of the best tracks, "America's Most Blunted," is book-ended with two skits arguing that music is better when experienced high and creativity is increased with marijuana.

The actual track finds Doom and Lord Quas bragging about their exploits in "staying sedated" and having "the best rolled L's."

There are no weak tracks on the album and skits, interludes, and samples propel the album forward rather than hinder it. Doom's lyrics and rhymes are surprising and intelligent. The song, "Strange Ways," illustrates Doom's regret over violence experienced in both the hood and in foreign wars.

"While the bosses sit up behind the desk/It costs billions to blast humans in half."

The track, "Fancy Clown," has Viktor Vaughn threatening to stomp Doom (the same person) into the ground for sleeping with his girl.

Doom proves that he is full of surprises in "Great Day." He raps, "Spit so many verses sometime my jaw twitches/One thing this party could use is more...Booze," showing the folly in the objectification of women that is often seen in many hip-hop albums.

"Madvillainy" is an accomplished album that becomes better with repeated listens.

Actress Janet Leigh dies at 77

Janet Leigh's most famous scene was so terrifying it put her off showers for the rest of her life.

Leigh, who died Sunday, insisted she always took baths after seeing the finished cut of Alfred Hitchcock's "Psycho," in which her character was slashed to death in a motel shower in what may be the silver screen's most memorable murder.

Leigh died at her Beverly Hills home, with husband Robert Brandt and her daughters, actresses Jamie Lee Curtis and Kelly Curtis, at her side. She was 77.

"She died peacefully," Heidi Schaeffer, a spokeswoman for Jamie Lee Curtis, said Monday. Leigh had suffered from vasculitis, an inflammation of the blood vessels, for the past year.

Series of ministry forums begins

Separation of religion and politics discussed by professor, pastor

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the first of three forums sponsored by CrossRoads of Ecumenical Campus Ministries, Lyman Baker, instructor of English, and Cam McConnell, pastor at First Presbyterian Church in Manhattan, debated the topic of "Civil Rights in an Age of Terror."

McConnell said while the separation of church and state is a crucial aspect of our society, many people misinterpret the First Amendment.

"The Bill of Rights is at the core of America's soul," McConnell said.

However, McConnell pointed out that, most of the time, when people are randomly searched in airports, they do not think their rights are violated.

"Most people really don't care, because they know the security is for their own benefit," he said. "It's not just an arbitrary use of power."

McConnell argued bills such as the Patriot Act are not entirely problematic, but said continuing to examine the policies of our government and refine them accordingly is appropriate.

"The PATRIOT Act was not an executive order. We need to hold our congressmen and women and president accountable for its content and enforcement," he said.

Baker, on the other hand, argued terrorist threats are not a new phenomenon in the world.

"Europeans have been living with terrorism for a long time, and they've been doing it as democracies," he said.

Baker said terrorism should be treated as a law enforcement problem and not dealt with militarily.

Oral arguments heard in U.S. Supreme Court as Kansas, Colorado contest water rights

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court would become a water-management agency if the state of Kansas has its way, a Colorado attorney argued in the decades-old dispute over the Arkansas River on Monday.

The high court already resolved the central legal issues in the case. Justices ruled in 1995 that Colorado diverted millions of gallons of Arkansas River water to its farm fields, taking water that should have gone to Kansas and violating the Arkansas River compact.

In 2001, the Supreme Court ordered Colorado to pay millions of dollars in damages and interest for depleting the river — although not as much as Kansas wanted.

Kansas officials returned to the court on Monday, asking for $24 million more in interest than the court-appointed special master recommended.

Kansas is also seeking changes in how the compact, which governs how the states use water from the river, will be enforced. For example, Kansas is asking the court to appoint a river master to decide how much water to release each year.

The lawyer representing Colorado, David Robbins, cautioned the court would "become a super water-management agency for the country" if justices grant Kansas' request.

"Well, the dispute is going to come up here, anyway," Justice Antonin Scalia responded.

Attorneys in the case endured lively questioning from the justices, who were hearing the first argument of their new term.

A river master, like an arbitrator, would carry out the court's decree, and whose decisions would be harder to appeal. It's a different job from that of special master, who acts as a fact-finder for the court.

Appointing a river master would be unusual for the high court, which has taken that step in only two other cases: a fight between Texas and New Mexico over the Pecos River and a battle among Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City over the Delaware River.

Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline thought the justices seemed skeptical of the river master idea. Kline did not argue the case — that job was done by John Draper, a special assistant to Kline — but was in the courtroom with other attorneys involved.

"I thought the court hesitated, just in the context that they don't want to keep dealing with it," Kline said in an interview afterward. "I think Colorado's statement that they would agree to arbitration in the future is weighing on the court's mind."

But Kline was encouraged by the court's reaction to another request by Kansas: to use annual measurements, instead of a 10-year average, to determine Colorado's compliance with the compact. The special master in the case, Arthur Littleworth, used the 10-year average when deciding compliance.

It's vital to Kansas farmers that water promised under the compact be delivered each year, Draper said in arguing for Kansas. "If water is not delivered as required in one year, it cannot be recouped the following year," he said.

Justice David Souter noted crops are grown annually, not every 10 years.

The debate over money concerns interest on damages Colorado owes Kansas. Kansas is asking for $53 million, while Littleworth recommended $29 million.

Regardless of what the court decides, Kline said, the litigation is more about water than money.

"As you apply this compact in the future, we are getting hundreds of thousands of acre feet of water that would not have come to Kansas" without the Supreme Court's earlier ruling, he said.

An acre foot is the amount of water 1 foot deep covering a flat acre of land.

The Justice Department sided with Colorado against the higher interest amount and against appointment of a river master; assistant to the solicitor general James A. Feldman did not take a position on annual measurements versus a 10-year average to determine Colorado's compliance with the compact.

Car bombs kill more than 20 in Iraq

By Sinan Salaheddin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Insurgents exploded two car bombs at the gates of the main U.S.-Iraqi headquarters in Baghdad and near major hotels Monday, killing at least 21 people and wounding 96. In Fallujah, U.S. warplanes struck what the military called terror hideouts, killing 11, doctors said women and children were among the dead.

The two car bombs ripped through central Baghdad streets about an hour apart. Two more vehicle bombs went off the northern city of Mosul, killing three people.

The attacks were the latest in the insurgents' swelling campaign of vehicle blasts. In September, militants carried out at least 39 such bombings — the highest number in any month since the Americans invaded in March 2003. Some of the near-daily explosions have caused only injuries, but others wreaked devastation, such as a series of vehicle blasts on Thursday that killed 35 children and seven adults.

Insurgents have also stepped up their strategy of kidnappings aimed at driving U.S. allies out of the country. Militants on Monday claimed to have killed a Turk and an Iraqi businessman abducted in late August, calling them spies. The family of the businessman, a longtime resident of Italy, said the Italian government confirmed the man's death.

Other militants freed two Indonesian women whose abduction was reported last week.

Also Monday, the U.S. military said two American soldiers were killed by gunfire at a checkpoint in Baghdad a day earlier. As of Friday, 1,055 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war, according to the Defense Department.

In Monday's first blast in Baghdad, a four-wheel-drive vehicle packed with explosives detonated outside the heavily fortified Green Zone, the seat of the U.S. Embassy and key Iraqi government offices, Interior Ministry spokesman Col. Adnan Abdul-Rahman said.

Yarmouk Hospital received 15 bodies and 81 wounded from the explosion, said Sabah Aboud, the facility's chief registration official.

The blast went off at 8:45 a.m. near a checkpoint at the western entrance to the complex, said Maj. Phil Smith, a spokesman for the U.S. 1st Cavalry Division. No coalition forces were hurt in either of Monday's blasts, Smith said.

The blast was also near a recruitment center for Iraqi security forces. Such centers have frequently been targets for bombings.

"I was thrown 10 meters (yards) away and hit the wall," said Wissam Mohammed, 30, who was visiting the center. He lay in a bed at Yarmouk Hospital, his right hand broken, his head wrapped in bandages and his clothes stained with blood.

The second car bomb exploded at 9:45 a.m., targeting a convoy of four-wheel drive vehicles leaving a complex of major hotels where foreign contractors and journalists reside.

At least six people were killed and 15 wounded, said Tahsin al-Freiji of the U.S.-trained Facility Protection Service, which guards major installations in the city.

Local Mexican restaurant seeks cooks for reopening

Competition experiences increase in sales during closure of El Cazador in Manhattan

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The need for one or two more cooks is slowing the reopening of El Cazador Authentic Mexican Food and Cantina.

Sammy Samarrai, executive vice president with S and S Development Company Inc., said the restaurant needs six cooks in order to open.

El Cazador, 3003 Anderson Ave., is rented from S and S.

Samarrai said Santiago Palomino, El Cazador's manager, has been searching for cooks nationwide and in Mexico.

"Without cooks, you can't open," Samarrai said.

"He's going out of town asking for some help."

Palomino hired four cooks and one that might come in from Mexico, but it will take time for the cook to go through the legal process to work in the United States, Samarrai said.

After 15 of Palomino's employees were arrested for immigration violations in mid-August, he had to close the restaurants in Manhattan, Topeka and Junction City.

"Right now he wants to open in Manhattan because that's where the main restaurant is," Samarrai said.

Samarrai said Palomino is making sure the green cards his employees have are real. The ones his previous employees had were fake.

Also, he said, employees with fake green cards are afraid to work in Manhattan because of the 15 arrests.

"They lied to him. It's not his fault," Samarrai said.

While waiting to open, which Palomino will do as soon as he can, redecoration is in progress, Samarrai said.

"He's changing the carpet, painting," Samarrai said. "He's facelighting the site."

Meanwhile, Carlos O'Kelly's has been experiencing an influx in business, since it is the only sit-down Mexican food restaurant in Manhattan,

"Without cooks, you can't open. (The manager) is going out of town asking for some help."

VICE PRESIDENT WITH S AND S
DEVELOPMENT COMPANY INC.

Travis Tucker, supervisor, said.

"We're experiencing an increase in business," Tucker said.

"Some of that is probably because of El Cazador," he said.

Tucker said last week they had a 30-percent increase compared to last year, but they have been experiencing sales increases for several months.

Jim Wright, general manager of O'Kelly's, said since Fort Riley has had many soldiers returning from Iraq, soldiers have increased the sales.

Because of that, he said, whether or not El Cazador being closed has made a difference is not immediately evident.

"I'm sure it has not hurt our business," he said.

Counseling services evaluated

By Jatin Srivastava
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

University Counseling Services just received its annual checkup.

The 2004 evaluation has been released with an analysis of mental illnesses, staff productivity and financial performances.

Data on initiatives and success rates are counted, Dr. Fred Newton, director of Counseling Services, said.

The annual report of services reflects a significant increase in outreach activities, whereas the direct service contact figures have decreased compared to FY 2002.

Arthur Rathbun, biofeedback and stress management specialist at UCS, said although enrollment has decreased, outreach activities at Counseling Services has increased.

"Most of the students now coming to us have severe problems. So we spend more time with an individual,"

he said.

Rathbun said 10 to 12 sessions are spent with students who have severe problems, such as stress-related and test anxiety problems.

"Now the trend in the nature of illness has shifted to stress-related illnesses like TMJ, teeth grinding, migraine, headaches, acne, IBS, hypertension, high blood pressure and concentration problems," Rathbun said.

Newton said he was concerned about the growth in the number of cases.

"We handle various issues causing stress like grief, relationships, conflicts, and career issues and learning problems," he said. "Even during this semester the number of cases has gone up by 15 to 20 percent."

Although UCS funding does increase each year, there are still financial challenges.

"These years the budgets are a bit tighter. We actually have less money than we had six years ago. We get a 2 percent annual increase from student privilege fee but state salary increase is about four percent and it is creating a deficit every year," Newton said.

Michael Lynch, associate vice president for the education and personal development program, said K-State's grant for studying alcohol abuse was terminated this year after four years of existence.

"With the new grant allocation from Sunflower Health Foundation for lifestyle education, there will be increased emphasis on lifestyle and physical health activities," Lynch said.

Newton said he wants to make Counseling Services more accessible to students and community.

"We are trying to become more accessible online and are also planning to start an online help line where students can express their issues and concerns without disclosing their identities," he said.

"As of now, I have spent $8,000 on my car," Frost said. "But when it comes down to making my car a little flashy, every dime is well spent."

Zerby said he has several customers like Bratt and Frost.

"We usually get male customers, age 15-30," he said. "Most of our customers have only one thing on mind: status."

Zerby said decisions on upgrades can show how much people care for their cars, as well as their personality.

"At Xpertinstaller, we have worked on upgrades ranging from a $50 CD player install to internal fiberglass upgrades," Zerby said. "Just think about it: You have a well-painted, new car with a monster sound system, huge rims, and great seats. It shows you have money."

He said some people even put things like DVD players or PlayStation 2 systems in their cars.

"We even have some speakers that can make cell phones bounce inches off of the hood of your car," Zerby said.

Not everyone wants to be in "The Fast and the Furious," however.

Franklin Katschke, freshman in political science, said such modifications are much too expensive.

"Yeah, it may look really cool to have a car with all the upgrades, but spending as much as you bought with the original vehicle is a little crazy," Katschke said. "I guess as long as they look cool, that is okay."

Kelly Hearn, Clay Center, Kan., resident and Xpertinstaller customer, said although he enjoys upgrading his car, there is nothing wrong with keeping things the way they were originally built.

"I just feel like if the production line felt like my car should look that way, then it should look that way, no questions asked," Hearn said.

Hearn is the owner of a 1998 Mustang Convertible.

"I've made minor alterations with my car, with my lighting, amplifiers, and subwoofers," he said. "But I have only spent a little over $1,000 extra on my car."

For Bratt and Hearn, they are both unsatisfied with a part of their vehicle experience.

"Sure my car is not perfect," Bratt said. "But if I were to buy a new car that would not require upgrades, I would buy a Lamborghini Murcielago."

Bratt said his car is his canvas.

"The car is just a piece of art because so much goes into the car," Bratt said. "It is so beautiful."

Hearn said beauty can be found in more classic models.

"If I could pick any car out on the market, I would have to go with a 1967 Mustang," Hearn said. "Sometimes the classics are best."

all the time."

Murray won an Aug. 31 hearing that gave his trust company the rights to the $300,000 left to the couple's 5-year-old daughter, Ciara. The couple, who divorced in June 2003, had a joint custody arrangement.

According to the Associated Press, documents from the hearing indicated Ross-Murray told her ex-husband a man she was dating was about to move to Lawrence from California. Her body was discovered after that man called authorities, concerned because he had been unable to reach her by phone.

stark contrast in styles, Procter said.

"Dick Cheney is quite a bit older and nobody ever claimed this guy was charismatic or a feel-good politician," he said. "On the other side you have this youthful senator who just is almost bubbly. You are going to have this enthusiastic, bubbly guy on one side, and you will have this older, far more reserved politician on the other side."

In 2000, 46.5 million people watched the first presidential debate between Bush and Al Gore, but then the viewership plummeted to 28.5 million for the vice presidential encounter between Cheney and Sen. Joe Lieberman.

But with Kerry leading in some voter polls, the debate tonight will be crucial for both political parties — drawing more viewers.

"A lot of people are saying the vice presidential debate is important because Bush did so poorly the first debate," Procter said.

"Also, it's important to the Democrats, because they need to maintain the momentum they got out of the first debate. There is more importance on this debate than usual," he said.

— The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Professor makes court appearance

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State English professor made his first appearance in a Douglas County court Monday after being charged with the first-degree murder of his ex-wife.

Thomas Murray was cleared as a suspect this summer in the death of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross-Murray, who was found dead on Nov. 14, 2003 at her Lawrence home. He was arrested Monday morning after dropping off his 5-year-old daughter, Ciara, at a Manhattan school.

Murray and his wife divorced in June 2003.

The Douglas County attorney declined to comment on what evidence led to Murray's arrest.

Pedro Irigonegaray, Murray's attorney, requested a lower bond of $100,000. That request will be heard at a bond hearing Thursday.

Bond currently is set at $1 million. "We would like a lower bond so Dr. Murray can continue with his normal life," Irigonegaray said.

Murray also is prohibited from contacting his daughter, who is listed as a witness.

Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, has suspended Murray with pay. He is forbidden from coming onto campus or contacting students.

"This is a pretty rare event," White said. "It's a case where we are trying to use good judgment and protect the interest of our students."

White said the administration has kept up on the case since Murray was first named a suspect last fall.

"We were keeping up with the situation much like anyone else when it comes to the newspaper," White said. "We were aware and very conscious of that."

White said that Murray will be suspended until further notice.

"I think it would be safe to say we are waiting to see how the legal process plays out," he said.

Irigonegaray declined to comment on his witness list, however, the Lawrence Journal-World reported Tuesday that the case has an unusually long list of witnesses at 340, including K-State employees

Debate gets personal

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dick Cheney and John Edwards got personal Tuesday night.

In a 90-minute debate at the University of Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Vice President Cheney and Edwards, the Democratic challenger, discussed foreign and domestic policy.

The vice presidential debate was not without frequent jabs — including Cheney's tie to Halliburton oil company.

"While he was CEO of Halliburton, they paid millions of dollars in fines for providing false information on their company, just like Enron and Ken Lay. They did business with Libya and Iran, two sworn enemies of the United States. They're now under investigation for having bribed foreign officials during that period of time," Edwards said. "Not only that, they've gotten a $7.5 billion no-bid contract in Iraq, and instead of part

Military charges expected

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Military charges are expected to be filed against two Fort Riley soldiers accused of murder.

Civilian first-degree murder charges were dropped by the Clay County attorney's office against Sgts. Aaron Stanley and Eric Colvin. Both are members of Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry.

The men were being held in connection with the shooting deaths of Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, of Oxnard, Calif., and Spc. Christopher D. Hymer, 23, of Nevada, Mo. The incident occurred in Clay County, 30 miles north of Fort Riley.

"Here at Fort Riley, we have a staff judge advocate, and that's the legal department," Sam Robinson, Fort Riley spokeswoman, said. "They

MCC, KSU work together to offer dual degrees

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's a case of an education divided.

An increasing number of students are choosing to earn dual degrees from K-State and Manhattan Christian College.

As communication between the two schools improves, it is becoming easier for students to divide their education between the institutions, said fifth-year senior Lynette Brax.

"Advisers at both schools are becoming more knowledgeable," Brax said. "They are more familiar with how credits transfer between the schools, and so they are better able to help students."

Brax is earning a dual degree — with a degree in Bible theology from Manhattan Christian College and an elementary education degree from K-State.

Although she already has completed her work at MCC, as the school is locally known, she is working on finishing the requirements for her elementary education degree this year.

Because the schools allow students to earn two bachelor's degrees in five years by combining transferrable credits, she cannot graduate from one school before the other, but will instead graduate from both schools in May.

Lauren Heidebrecht also chose to earn degrees from MCC and K-State, in Bible theology and elementary education.

"I originally chose Manhattan Christian College to go into cross-cultural ministry," Heidebrecht said.

Students take to the Web for romance

Illustration by Jeff Yeung | COLLEGIAN

RALEIGH, N.C. — Love can be found in the fast lane, on the side, in the mind, and now, on the Web.

Internet dating's introduction to pop culture arrived through Meg Ryan and Tom Hanks' 1998 flick "You've Got Mail." Since then, Internet dating sites have flooded the Web with Yahoo and MSN Personals, Match.com, and ePersonals.com. Two years ago, North Carolina State University students added to the mesh with CampusFlirts.com.

Created by Joe Akink, CampusFlirts.com is now under the leadership of Michael Mason. Mason reports steady growth of the company since 2003.

"We have seen steady growth. But we expect that growth to explode over the remainder of the academic year, since we just re-launched the service with a new marketing emphasis: www.CampusFlirts.com, Where It Pays to Date," Mason said.

So, this Internet dating site might pay off, but the question remains, is Internet dating and matching hot or not?

Mason thinks it's here to stay. "Internet dating is a trend that is going nowhere. If you look at your average freshman entering college this year and compare them to an entering freshman 10 years ago, you're going to see a vast difference. The new freshman grew up with the Internet being a vital part of their academic and social life," Mason said.

VICTORIA'S SECRET VISITS CAMPUS

COLUMBUS, Ohio — The face of Victoria's Secret sub-brand Pink is a supermodel, but for Ohio State University, two students will use their brains and not modeling skills.

During spring 2003 Victoria's Secret searched the nation's colleges for young women who would be their campus' face for the brand.

But these young ladies aren't supermodels. They're business women, chosen for their work, not their bodies.

"They weren't just looking for a pretty face, but for someone who is known around campus," said Kara Silverman, a senior in geography and Jewish studies.

Silverman and Amy Porter, a junior in fashion merchandising, were chosen out of thousands of applications to become part of Team Pink, a group of 21 college students who represent the PINK line on their local campuses.

"All they are really asking me to do is support another cause and the cause happens to be underwear instead of the homeless, child poverty or hunger," she said. "It felt really good that Victoria's Secret saw something in me that I had always seen."

SEXUAL AWARENESS HIGHLIGHTS OUTWEEK

ATHENS, Ohio — October is Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Month, and Ohio University's Open Doors organization has coordinated a weeklong series of events to bring that theme to Athens, Ohio.

Monday was the first day of the 16th annual OUTweek. Among the events are an ice cream social, a dance party and two high-profile events concerning the 1998 murder of gay student Matthew Shepard.

Mickey Hart, coordinator of LGBT programs at OU, said OUTweek brings to light real-life problems of the LGBT community that are often ignored in the media.

"In the media, there's more awareness of LGBT people, but maybe not the issues people face and the struggles that go on," he said. "This promotes that."

Red Cross Blood Drive on road to achieving goal of 800 units

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight hundred units is the goal by the end of the week, and with 174 donations on Monday and 192 on Tuesday, the Red Cross Blood Drive is well on its way to achieving that goal.

"It's the goal every spring and fall," said Kristi Reif, Red Cross donor recruitment representative. "Usually we come close."

The "Bleed Purple" blood drive has stations set up in the K-State Student Union and Putnam Hall. There was a station on Monday and Tuesday at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Those who donate receive a free T-shirt and a chance to win a coupon to Chipotle, Reif said.

burrito certificates," she said. "Donors will be entered in a drawing."

Reif said about 100 K-State volunteers come from greek houses, residence halls and other organizations.

Also, the Kiwanis club of Manhattan distributes T-shirts and helps out at each station.

"We volunteer every time,"

Robert Smail, Kiwanis member, said. "We change services every four hours."

Smail said volunteering is the way he helps out. He can no longer give blood after living in the tropic for several years and taking a blood thinner.

"I used to donate when I was back in college," he said.

There were sign-up sheets in the Union last week to recruit donors, and volunteers called previous donors, Reif said.

"We have a list of everyone who donated last semester," she said. "We called everyone on that list, or at least tried to."

Reif said it is important for donors to drink water and eat. She recommended drinking twice the usual amount of water.

"Make sure you drink water and eat iron-rich foods," she said. "A lot of girls are anemic, so they need to make sure they eat iron-rich foods."

Erin Lee, sophomore in early childhood education, gave blood on Monday. "I'd given blood before, and they called me to see if I would again," she said.

Lee said she didn't feel lightheaded after giving blood, which sometimes happens when people give blood.

"I feel fine, but it took them a couple of times to find a vein to give blood," she said. "My veins are hard to find."

Lee said she gave blood as her way of helping out.

"I have O-negative blood, so anybody can use that," she said. "So, I feel like I should go donate."

Lawyers argue for Kansas' interests

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Supreme Court began hearing a case Monday involving a dispute between the states of Kansas and Colorado concerning the Arkansas River.

Kansas is asking for $53 million in interest for damages done by Colorado when they violated the Arkansas River compact by using millions of gallons of water from the river for their farms.

Colorado was ordered in 2001 by the Supreme Court to pay damages and interest for the river to Kansas.

Whitney Watson, spokesman for Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline's office, said Kansas is asking for interest that accrued from the time the suit was filed.

"We were asking for interest on damages, and we were awarded interest for the damages," he said. "We just want it from a certain date rather than when the courts ordered it."

Arthur Littleworth, special master in the case, suggested Kansas be compensated with $29 million, which is $24 million less than Kansas' request.

Kansas also is requesting a river master able to implement court orders, Watson said.

"We want a river master appointed because any other controversies that are made, the river master would be able to order the state to release water rather than forcing us to go back to court," he said.

The Associated Press reported Monday that the lawyer representing Colorado — David Robbins — said if Kansas gets its way, the court will become "a super water management agency for the country."

Only two other cases have involved appointing a river master in the Supreme Court including Texas versus New Mexico over the Pecos River and Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York City's dispute over the Delaware River.

Kansas also is requesting the court to use annual measurements instead of a 10-year average to assure Colorado is meeting the compact's requirements.

John Fliter Jr., associate professor of political science, said because the case involves a dispute between two states, it falls under the Supreme Court's jurisdiction.

Fliter said out of the 80 to 85 cases the Supreme Court decides each term, only about three or four fall solely under the court's jurisdiction.

New form of contraceptive allows men to share in the burden of birth control

Being on the pill kind of sucks. Yeah, there are advantages, but it's a hassle remembering to go get it every month, not to mention take it every day at roughly the same time.

Plus there's the added risk of potentially dangerous side-effects: blood clots that can be fatal, increased risk of certain types of cancer, weight gain and mood swings. If you have a girlfriend, you know mood swings are indeed dangerous.

This is why I was filled with absolute glee when I read that a new form of birth control is coming out... for men! Pharmaceutical companies in Europe will soon release the male equivalent of "the pill." It's not really a pill, though. It's a series of injections and a small implant, much like the women's Norplant from the 90's.

It sounds scary. But they're also working on gels and patches for men squeamish about needles.

The new method for men decreases sperm production to nearly zero, much like the women's pill merely suppresses the release of an egg.

And it's completely reversible. Within three months of stopping the treatment, all systems are go. This is also parallel to the women's contraceptive method.

Being a naturally curious person, I just had to go out and find some men to discuss this with. So I asked some male co-workers and just for good measure I also asked some strangers at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

You'd be surprised at how willing men are to talk about their sperm with total strangers. The responses were mixed and, at first, there was a lot of confusion.

We had to simplify the medical jargon to, "So, it just keeps my soldiers from marching?" and clarify whether it would kill any of "the boys."

The answers are "yes" and "no," in that order. But as far as whether these fine specimens would use the product, there were several resounding "no's." Even a few "hell no's."

Some of the men I questioned were unsure. One stated there just wasn't enough clinical evidence on side effects to validate him using the new method as opposed to his girlfriend taking the pill.

He had no idea of the risks involved for women on the pill. The risks for the new male method are slight weight gain and suppression of good cholesterol; considerably, less than those for women.

A few slightly more enlightened men said this was something they would consider.

My underlying motive for these interviews (of course I had one, do you really think I care that much about sperm?) was to see whether men thought birth control was the responsibility of women.

While some men like to say they don't think birth control is a woman's responsibility, the answer, sadly enough, was generally yes.

Women change their body chemistry to prevent unwanted pregnancies. Women carry around condoms because men can't always be counted on to have them.

I don't even know many men help pay for their girlfriends' birth control pills.

For once, I'd like to see some of the responsibility on men.

If you care about the woman in your life, you should be more than willing to make this kind of change for her. She would, or already has, for you.

The next generation of men and women can benefit from the use of male birth control.

Maybe things will be a little more equal then, because right now, they're not.

Nastiness of Boyda-Ryun congressional race caused, encouraged by both candidates

The battle between incumbent Jim Ryun and Nancy Boyda for the second district seat in Congress has undergone a drastic change from dealing with issues to complete character assassination.

At least I think there was some civility at first. All this flying mud has made it hard to remember if this election was ever clean.

First from the right was the party Republicans threw in Topeka to mark a year since Nancy Boyda registered to vote in the district she wants to represent.

They tried to claim Boyda was doing the same thing Sen. Hillary Clinton did in New York.

Since then, Ryun's campaign has published ads claiming that Boyda was against the war in Iraq and is part of an organization that opposes the hunt for Osama bin Laden.

Boyda fired back, nearly calling Ryun a traitor for working against legislation that would restrict insurance peddlers from defrauding soldiers.

The birthday party was pathetic and immature. Boyda's husband has been practicing law in Manhattan for years, and Boyda previously was registered to vote in another part of the state.

Plus, it's rather hypocritical when you consider how the GOP begged Alan Keyes to move from Maryland to Chicago to run for Senate against Barack Obama.

As for the anti-war work, well, for goodness sake, Boyda is a Democrat! You can't keep a Democrat from protesting.

Make one of them mad, and it's like they suddenly sprout picket signs from their arms and buttons start popping out of their armpits.

Seriously now, this charge seems to mostly come from Boyda having ridden a bus with members of Act Now to Stop the War and End Racism. They a group organizes protests to the war in Iraq and other things.

I haven't heard them say much about bin Laden, but Boyda claims to have stopped all protesting of the war once it started because she cares about the soldiers. I have yet to find any information that says otherwise. I doubt there is any.

Boyda just hitched a ride and talked with people. It's not like she visited one of Saddam's palaces and lived it up for a few nights.

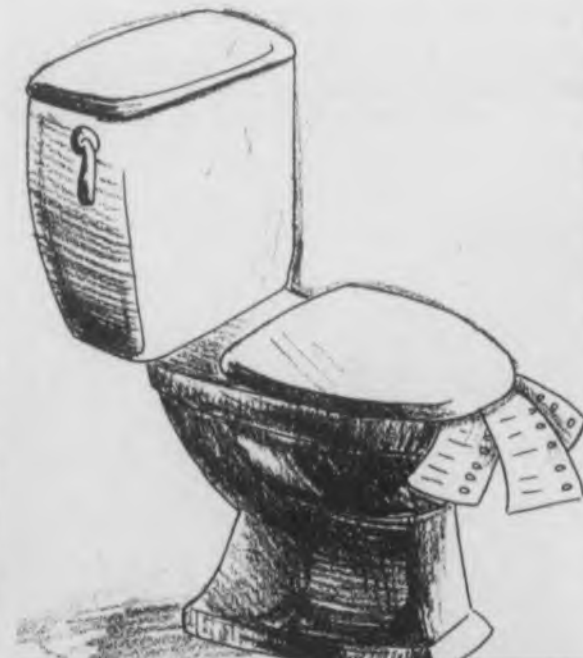

As for Ryun's insurance involvement, there's so much gray area. Ryun has taken contributions from insurance groups, and has worked to allow soldiers competitive life insurance plans.

However, some insurance companies have abused soldiers, selling overpriced life insurance packages to men with little time to think about their options before shipping out. And Ryun has accepted thousands from the insurance lobby.

Ryun needs to show what he's made of on this subject fast because there's plenty of room for public interpretation.

Both candidates have dived straight into latrine-basement politics with absolute enthusiasm. Hell, they both just might deserve each other.

The jabs and personal attacks aren't all bad.

In Tuesday's vice presidential debate, Vice President Dick Cheney and Democratic challenger John Edwards attacked each other.

Edwards accused Cheney of taking advantage of the Iraq situation in his role as CEO of Halliburton oil company while Cheney accused Edwards of holding the worst attendance record in the U.S. Senate.

As subdued as the election debates can get, it's nice to see more than just a moderated press conference. Cheney and Edwards' debate not only highlights important issues but engages viewers and potential undecided voters.

However, attacks cannot get out of hand. Focusing on insignificant personal issues rather than broader policy debates can leave voters unsure of each camp's platform.

President George W. Bush and Democratic candidate John Kerry should take cues from their right-hand men and not be afraid to actually debate in the last two meetings.

After all, the decision is not about how they're the same, but about every way in which they differ.

Be aware of your voter registration status this fall

Editor,
I am a voter, and I voted in the last election in Riley County. Today, I was thinking I needed to find out where to go vote in this election because I heard the location changed from four years ago.
...I called the courthouse, and they informed me that I needed to re-register because I had moved from the address I was at four years ago.

I want people to know this information, because if I had not re-registered, I would not have been able to vote on Nov. 2nd. I would have been extremely disappointed at not being able to vote due to a minor problem.
If you have moved within the last four years and were registered to vote, you need to re-register either at the county courthouse, or you can stop by the Women's Center on campus and fill out a registration form, and we can mail it to the courthouse for you.

Collegian misplaces focus on murder story

Editor,
As a student in one of Tom Murray's classes, my reaction to Mr. Murray's arrest was typical. I was shocked, as I would imagine most everyone else was upon hearing the news. I first learned of the arrest from the Topeka Capital-Journal.
Then I read a very similar article in the Collegian. This article, however, after listing the facts, digressed into what was no more than gossip.

How is a student's account of the accused coming off as "weird" and "spaced out" relevant to the overall story?
This man's guilt has yet to be proven, so why allow a description that potentially undermines the man's character?

I say this: Shame on you, Collegian.
Next time stick to the facts and leave the gossip to the mob, where it belongs.

Oklahoma fraternities should become dry houses

OKLAHOMA DAILY U. OKLAHOMA

NORMAN, Okla. — After last week's death of Sigma Chi pledge Blake Adam Hammon-tree, the University of Oklahoma should make fraternities join sororities in not allowing alcohol.
At Colorado State University, when an alcohol-related death occurred in a frat house, alcohol was banned in all fraternities and sororities on campus, according to ABC.com.
The University of Colorado at Boulder too is considering changing its fraternity alcohol policy after an alcohol-related incident.

The University of Oklahoma also should make a statement about its stance on underage drinking by banning alcohol in all frat houses.
It should be said that many, if not most, members of fraternities are probably responsible alcohol consumers. However, this needs to become a rule for the few who are unable to handle the responsibility of living in a frat house where alcohol is present.
No doubt many students would find this action extreme. But this will not restrict those who are of age from going to a local bar to get a drink.

What it will do is help restrict those who are underage, who should not be drinking in the first place.
It is always unfortunate when the actions of a few irresponsible people cause restriction to be placed on everyone. But parents and family members of fraternity members need to be assured that actions have been taken to prevent any further tragedies from occurring.
Making fraternities dry at the university is the responsible thing to do and is clearly a necessary action.

Bush, Kerry each have long records on environment

DAILY TEXAN U. TEXAS-AUSTIN

AUSTIN, Texas — In May 2004, a Yale survey found that 10 percent of voters consider environmental policy the most important issue of the election. But because environmental effects often take years or even decades to observe, it is more difficult to engage voters on the results of most policies.
President Bush has had four years to prove his previous campaign promise of compassionate conservatism, yet his environmental record has been riddled with criticism.
Within months of inauguration, the White House pulled the United States out of the Kyoto Protocol, a 1997 international agreement to limit gas emissions causing global climate change. Like many of his policies, the president favors deregulation and voluntary action for environmental cooperation.
The Bush administration introduced the "Clear Skies Initiative" in February 2002, which put limits on sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides and mercury emissions. However, the main pollutant accused of causing global warming — carbon dioxide — was not limited by the act. But the administration has made strides to curb diesel pollution. In February 2004, the administration slated $65 million to reduce diesel pollution from school buses.

The president repeatedly has tried to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in northeastern Alaska for oil drilling. Congress must act to authorize the drilling and has so far remained against the measure.
Sen. John Kerry has had 20 years in Congress to establish himself as one of the greenest senators in Washington, and the League of Conservation Voters gave him an average rating of 96 of 100 on their environmental scorecard from 1985 to 2002.
Kerry has not openly stated he would ratify the Kyoto Protocol if elected. Kerry did not support the "Clear Skies Initiative" when it was passed, claiming it would maintain "current levels of pollution over the next two decades." Later in 2003, Kerry co-sponsored a bill to limit carbon dioxide emissions to levels during the first Bush's term. The senator has also repeatedly blocked motions to open ANWR for drilling.
Many conservatives may look to Kerry's environmental record for evidence to peg him as the most liberal senator in Congress. However, Kerry's convictions for the environment have left him with no contradiction with which to label a "flip-flop."

Both candidates favor exploring more renewable energy policies and minimizing national dependence on foreign energy sources.
The biggest flaw within the current administration's policy is its willingness to put industrial interests before those of the people. Opening national parks for more logging or oil exploration, reducing regulations on pollution emissions and ignoring growing scientific evidence for global climate change in the name of pleasing big business does not constitute a public service.
Kerry fought for commercial whaling bans, sustainable fishing and competitive grants for university research on invasive marine species; in effect, his policies tend to keep the Earth first.
Although environmental issues rarely shape the final outcome of an election, the handful of invaluable undecided voters in swing states may look to environmental impact as an issue that gives them a clear line to draw between the candidates. For them, it's hard not to favor the Massachusetts senator.

Stereotypes of racial ideology wrong, unjustified

DAILY KENT STATER KENT STATE U.

KENT, Ohio — Racism, albeit more subtle, is just as prevalent today as it was 50 years ago. One example of this is the perpetuation of the "black monolith," meaning black people still are considered by the nation's majority to think alike, speak alike and act alike.
The fact is that no one black person is just like another. They are all individuals with varying points of view. The consistent consolidation of one group of people into the same set of beliefs needs to end. Now.

Nevertheless, members of the majority continue to frustrate blacks with a barrage of statements such as, "Well, you're gonna have to start speaking for other black people, because you're the only one here."
Such brazen ignorance is repulsive. Since when did sharing similarities in skin color and heritage amount to sharing a brain?
Never.
The idea of the "black monolith" most likely sprung from the fact that blacks as a whole abhorred slavery and yearned for freedom. During the civil rights movement, blacks united to fight for the common belief in equality. These rights shouldn't be denied to any human being. Yet, when black people join together, the rest of the country feels threatened and decides to turn a positive act into a stereotype: All black people must think alike.

Believing in the same cause for the betterment of a group does not mean that group agrees on everything.
Black people are not robots. They don't all have the same leaders, they don't all cast the same ballots, and they don't all have the same opinions.

Faculty of the Month

We would like to recognize Dr. Bryan Schurle as the September Faculty of the Month. Dr. Schurle was nominated by Farmhouse Fraternity. He teaches Agricultural Finance and Principles of Agricultural Economics. Dr. Schurle was nominated and selected because of his dedication to students both inside and outside of the classroom. One of his students is quoted as saying, "He creates a comfortable environment where he not only challenges students to learn, but also entices them, through his knowledge and character, to pursue a deep understanding of the material." Congratulations, Dr. Schurle. The men and women of the greek community applaud your excellence in teaching.

Greek of the Month
JESSIE SCHILF

The Greek Community recognizes Jessie Schilf as the Greek of the Month for September. Jessie is a senior and member of Kappa Delta sorority. She is majoring in Public Relations and hopes to pursue that as a career after graduation. She is currently the Vice President of Public Relations for her chapter, and was previously the president during 2003. Jessie has won many honors through her chapter. This summer she won the Corne Anding Stegall leadership award, the highest undergraduate award recognized by Kappa Delta National Sorority, and was recognized by her chapter as most dedicated member. Jessie is also involved on campus. She teaches University Experience and Intro to Leadership Concepts, as well as tutoring and teaching dance. Because of her involvement both within and outside the Greek Community, we couldn't think of anyone more deserving of this award. Congratulations, Jessie, and thank you for all of your hard work and dedication.

Coach Bill Snyder not deterred by lack of television broadcast of intrastate rivalry

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since 1999, the Sunflower Showdown between the Wildcats and the Kansas Jayhawks has not been televised and now for the sixth season in a row, this year's game can only be heard on radio.

The 2004 showdown marks the 102nd time the intrastate rivals have met, dating back to 1902, but Coach Bill Snyder said not playing on television is the least of his worries.

"We're 0-2 on TV this year, so I'm probably just as pleased that we are not," Snyder said at his weekly press conference Tuesday. "I have no control over that, so I don't worry about it."

K-State has played twice on television in 2004, losing to Fresno State 45-21 on Sep. 11 and 42-30 to the Texas A&M Aggies Saturday.

The Jayhawks (2-3, 0-2) lead the all-time series 61-35-3, but the Wildcats (2-2, 0-1) have dwindled the lead with 11 straight wins in the series. During the streak, the Wildcats have won by an average margin of 33 points.

Kansas is coming off a 14-8 loss to Nebraska in Lawrence and will look to avoid a three-game skid when they take on the Wildcats Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

Sophomore running back John Randle rushed for a career-high 105 yards on 23 carries, and sophomore quarterback Adam Barmann passed 49 times for 200 yards in the loss. The Jayhawk defense also forced four turnovers against the Cornhuskers, including three interceptions.

In K-State's recent loss to Texas A&M, senior running back Darren Sproles rushed for 61 yards on 20 carries and fumbled the ball three times, while sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier threw the ball 45 times completing 29 for 247 yards and three touchdowns.

K-State controlled the clock, running 90 total plays, but was unable to pull out a comeback, dropping its fourth straight Big 12 Conference opener.

Kansans missing out on rivalry

It's the biggest game of the weekend in the State of Kansas and unless you have an extra 60 bucks laying around, you won't see it.

For the sixth straight season, the K-State/Kansas clash will not be televised, and it actually could be a good game. The early line has the Wildcats by only two points, and a few loony residents of Lawrence think they actually might have a chance against K-State.

But no TV. Granted, the Wildcats have won the last 11 meetings in the Sunflower Showdown, dominating the Jayhawks by double digits,

The K-State women's golf team struggled in the third round of the Price's Give 'Em Five Challenge Tuesday in Las Cruces, N.M., finishing in ninth place for the tournament.

After rounds of 303 and 305 respectively, the Wildcats shot 325 as a team in round three.

Sophomore Helene Robert was the top Wildcat for the tournament, shooting a combined 230 — good for a tie for 23rd place.

K-State's next competition takes place Oct. 11-12 at the Marilyn Smith/Sunflower Invitational in Lawrence.

Wildcat netters travel to Lawrence to take on Jayhawks, claim bragging rights

K-State meets the University of Kansas tonight in volleyball's version of the Sunflower Showdown.

The Wildcats will travel to Lawrence to take on the Jayhawks at 7 p.m. in the Horejsi Family Athletics Center.

No. 16 K-State heads into the match having won five straight to push its record to 10-4 on the season and 4-1 in the Big 12 Conference. The Jayhawks are 10-4 overall and 1-4 in the Big 12, where they have lost their last three matches to Texas, Nebraska and Baylor.

With the losses, Kansas fell out of the top 25, where it had been ranked 24th.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Kansas will be ready to play despite its three-match skid.

"The conference is as tough from top to bottom as it's ever been, at least during my time here, and KU has an excellent team," she said. "They're very good. Josi Lima is a fantastic middle blocker — she was all-conference last year — she'll be an important person for us to defend. If they ball-control well and are able to get her going, she could cause us a lot of problems."

Lima, who's averaging 3.68 kills per game this season and has 20 service aces, is the feature player for the Jayhawks. She's joined by libero Jill Dorsey, who leads the team with 4.64 digs per game, and setter Andi Rozum, who adds 11.32 assists per game.

The Wildcats have won 18 straight against the Jayhawks, dating back to 1994. However, last year's match in Lawrence was close, with Kansas jumping ahead two games to one before K-State came back to take the match in five games.

Fritz also has a personal connection with the Jayhawks. She played for and coached with Kansas coach Ray Bechard at Barton County Community College.

Fritz said facing her former coach doesn't change the way she approaches the game.

"I have nothing but a tremendous amount of respect for him and the teams that he coaches," she said. "I don't feel any differently going into this game than any other."

As for the significance of playing rival Kansas, Fritz said it's important, but there's no more emphasis on this match than any other.

"It's an important match, because it helps us with our recruiting, and one of our goals is we want to be the best team for sure in the state of Kansas and one of the best teams in the country," she said. "So I think that's the significance of it, but in terms of is it more important than any other match, it's not."

NFL | Aide says Lewis to plead guilty to drug charges

Baltimore Ravens running back Jamal Lewis has agreed to plead guilty in his federal drug conspiracy case, an aide to the presiding judge said Tuesday.

Lewis is scheduled to enter his plea Thursday in federal court in Atlanta, said Vicki Hanna, the courtroom deputy for U.S. District Judge Orinda D. Evans.

Hanna would not release details about Lewis' plea, including to what charge he will admit.

A source familiar with the plea negotiations told The Associated Press this past weekend that lawyers for Lewis have been negotiating a deal that would allow him to serve jail time in the offseason.

Under the deal being considered, Lewis would plead guilty to using a cell phone in violation of federal law, said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He would serve four months in a minimum-security prison and two months in a halfway house, the source said.

NASCAR | Junior fined, loses points due to vulgarity

A slip of the tongue on TV cost Dale Earnhardt Jr. first place and $10,000, penalties imposed by an increasingly image-conscious NASCAR.

Earnhardt was docked 25 points Tuesday in the Nextel Cup standings for using a vulgarity in an NBC interview after his victory at Talladega Superspeedway, dropping him to second place with seven races left in the season. He will appeal the point penalty.

Earnhardt still gets credit for the 14th victory of his career Sunday, and he has plenty of time to make up the deficit on new leader Kurt Busch, with up to 190 points available at each race.

Players anticipate final games of intramural football season

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The intramural flag football season is coming to a close this week, as playoffs wrap up Thursday night and bragging rights become official.

Intramural Coordinator John Wondra said things haven't been this major.

"There hasn't been any major complications, and several teams are undefeated and doing well," Wondra said.

Joe Wurtz, junior in civil engineering, is on a co-rec team and said he is enjoying himself this season. His team is 4-1 and won its first playoff game.

Wurtz said the intramural program is set up well.

"It's a good way to get girls involved, so it's not just a guy's sport. It shows how athletic the girls on your team really are," Wurtz said.

Lindy Pope, freshman in architectural engineering, said she wishes there was more physical play.

"It's been fun, but I wish there was more contact. Not a lot, but if there was more, you could get more done,"

Pope said.

Adam Matousek, junior in hotel and restaurant management, said the part of flag football he enjoyed most was getting legitimate wins. His team ended the season 3-1 when it lost its first playoff game.

Along with the positives, Matousek also said there are some things about the season he didn't like. One area he pointed out was problems with the rules.

He spoke out against the flag-guarding rule and the rule stating the first play on the ball has to be made from male to female or vice versa.

Flag-guarding means a player cannot try to block his or her flag when they have the ball.

"You get a 15-yard penalty for flag-guarding, so basically you have to run with your arms up," Matousek said.

He also disagreed with the rule which says the first play on the ball must be to a player of the opposite sex.

"The defense knows who they have to cover, so it makes it easier. There are other ways you can still get everyone involved, but it should be more surprising," Matousek said.

Scrimping and saving

Many low-cost solutions exist for students, residents

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Scattered pennies and change can go a long way if just spent at the right place.

The Encore Store, a local Manhattan thrift store, is one of several places to save a buck, volunteer Joyce O'Hara said.

"The prices here are very reasonable," O'Hara said. "We sell from the range of 25-cent games and puzzles to $8 winter coats."

The Encore Store is run by the ladies of St. Paul's Episcopal Church who volunteer their time from 1-4 p.m. six days a week.

"There are many things to buy," O'Hara said. "We sell clothes, shoes, books, kitchenware, small appliances and other knickknacks. Everything we sell have been donated to us. Everyone is welcome to come in."

Not too far from the Encore Store lies the Family Center Budget Shop, another not-for-profit thrift store, with more than favorable prices.

Volunteer for the Budget Shop, Lucille Johnson, said students come in looking for Halloween or other event costumes.

"Many clothes are available here, along with shoes, and various household items," Johnson said. "We also have a separate table that sells seasonal items."

Johnson said prices generally run from $.50 to $2.00 at the Family Budget Shop. They donate anything not sold to the Twin Valley Developmental Cooperation, Johnson said.

Bryce Koehn, junior in psychology and anthropology, frequents the Dillons in the West Loop area.

"I go to Dillons mainly for the location," Koehn said. "It is close to where I live. They usually have pretty good deals on certain food items."

One way Koehn said he decides to save a buck is by riding his bike around town rather than driving and paying for gas.

"I only spend $15 a week on non-necessities because I spend most of my money on rent and utilities," Koehn said. "I choose to pay $300 a month plus utilities for my house, so I have to limit my extra spending money, and riding my bike is just one way to do that."

Koehn said he doesn't choose to work during the school year, so money for him can be rather scarce.

"School and social activities are more important than working," he said.

Kayla Briggeman, sophomore in industrial engineering, spends most of her money on tuition and room and board for her sorority. She said Wal-Mart usually has decent prices on everything you can possibly need, but doesn't spend too much on other things.

"I try to only spend $5 a week on things I don't need such as a drink or snack."

Briggeman, who has a savings account, only goes to it in case of emergency.

"I work full time in the summer, but don't have a job during the school year," Briggeman said.

The penny can be pinched pretty far, but it can also lead to some unwelcome monthly bills.

Stephen Peters, professor in financing, said students can get tied up in high interest credit cards according to an informal survey he took after finishing college.

Peters explained that a credit card balance of $13,500 in college debt would take about 8 years to pay off at an annual rate of 18.5 percent if each minimal monthly payment was made. Instead of paying high interest rates, Peters suggests federal loans.

"It's important to understand the federal government has so much money to give out, and at reasonable low interest rates," Peters said. "If you want to borrow money, federal loans are the way to go. It is not need based, and you don't have to pay it back until you graduate."

America is a land of plenty; many tend to take it for granted

The first thing that struck me after landing in America was its abundance.

The feel of a developed nation started right in the airport, where I found a water fountain every 10 feet.

Then, I observed that all women applied make-up. All houses had air conditioning and heaters. Everyone owned a car, there are no questions about water supply and computers are household items.

I was overwhelmed at the amount of ice cream and milk shake I got for a few dollars in Baskin Robbins - everything was made possible by MasterCard.

One of my friends whose husband is a South Asian said, "I would be poor in America rather homeless in Laos."

My life always was about conservation. The idea of conservation is thrust from a very young age in developing nations. Due to high population, not everyone gets enough of everything.

Even a drop of water cannot be taken for granted. There is a constant reminder to conserve electricity, paper, gas, water, food - everything, in fact.

I have been called irresponsible by my mother for not turning off the light and fan when not being used.

I was not allowed to waste food; I had to walk shorter distances and take a bus for longer distances, if there was one.

Owning a vehicle is strictly among the upper-middle class, and most families have one vehicle. Family members caution each other "not to waste petrol."

Soon, I realized grass is not always greener on the other side. Through the media and observing student life on campus, I came to know students here have huge loans to repay.

Getting a college degree is a dream come true for the citizens of such a developed nation.

I observed students here work in all odd jobs to support themselves, hence, a car is necessary.

Most students fund their education and travel with their own money. Students work in cafeterias, gas stations, as nannies, drivers and do not feel embarrassed to discuss it. This shows there is high dignity of labor here.

Some students are married with children and balance education, work and family. Such things are unheard of among college students in India.

Working as any of the above would demean your family, even if it's not necessary to earn a few extra bucks.

If you are sick, you can just walk to any doctor and get diagnosed. One does not have to worry about going to a doctor; drugs can be bought with simple prescriptions. They are not expensive for ordinary ailments, and do not come with an alarming fine print.

One of my friends who went for an eye test here told me she was asked to sign a number of papers as an assurance that following up is her responsibility and she won't sue the doctor at all.

Life can be a challenge, and even the basics can't be taken for granted always.

Comic Rodney Dangerfield dies at 82

Rodney Dangerfield, the bug-eyed comic whose self-deprecating one-liners brought him stardom in clubs, television and movies and made his lament, "I don't get no respect," a catchphrase, died Tuesday. He was 82.

Dangerfield, who fell into a coma after undergoing heart surgery, died at 1:20 p.m., said publicist Kevin Sasaki. Dangerfield had a heart valve replaced Aug. 25 at the University of California, Los Angeles, Medical Center.

Sasaki said in a statement Dangerfield suffered a small stroke after the operation and developed infectious and abdominal complications. But in the past week he had emerged from the coma, the publicist said.

"When Rodney emerged, he kissed me, squeezed my hand and smiled for his doctors," Dangerfield's wife, Joan, said in the statement.

R. Kelly and Jay-Z reluctantly unite

The handwritten script appeared slowly at first, unspooling across the wide-screen video monitors inside the Allstate Arena as if scrawled by some giant, invisible hand.

"Dear Fans, Thank you," it began as the 23,000 people inside the suburban Chicago stadium cheered each word. The note was signed: R. Kelly.

As Kelly and Jay-Z kicked off their long-awaited Best of Both Worlds Tour, this was the first and only time the R&B icon acknowledged that, in his world, things could be better.

The tour originally was planned for 2002, to promote the artists' collaborative album, "Best of Both Worlds." But just before the album dropped, the notorious videotapes surfaced, showing a man who appears to be R. Kelly engaged in a variety of graphic sex acts with a young woman.

After that, Jay-Z shunned the pop crooner like a disease. He refused to promote the album in any way or even be photographed with Kelly.

COLUMN | State of Kansas needs to take action to broadcast annual K-State-Kansas matchup on television and there is another huge game in Dallas, Texas — the tangle for the Governors' Cup should at least be shown for the people who really care.

The last time the Sunflower Showdown was even remotely close to being televised was in 2001 when the game was seen via pay-per-view, when K-State trounced the Jayhawks 40-6 in Manhattan.

As a Kansan, I feel it is my right to be able to see the intrastate rivalry game — a game that has been played since 1902.

Not only do the fans miss out on being a part of the rivalry, Kansas television stations and local advertisers miss out on advertising possibilities. What better way to reach local consumers than to buy spots during the game?

At least we have an in-state rival, unlike Missouri or Nebraska.

Obviously, the Sunflower Showdown isn't as revered as the Red River Shootout or Michigan vs. Ohio State or Army vs. Navy, but it's all we got. Besides — there is no real reason to watch the Kansas City Chiefs.

Another reason the game should be at least televised in Kansas is bragging rights.

No matter what people say, they are either K-State fans or Kansas fans when the Sunflower Showdown comes around.

Televising the game gives K-Staters everywhere another chance to rub in how dominant the Wildcats are, as we hear the Jayhawks' rally cry of "just wait til basketball season."

The State of Kansas should really step in and do something. I mean, the teams are playing for the Governors' Cup. I'm not asking for a law to be passed, but a nice little nudge to the television stations from the powers-that-be couldn't hurt, right?

Who knows? The game could be another complete blow-out, or it could be a riveting, nail-biting game, but not enough of this great state's people will get to witness the 102nd Sunflower Showdown.

"They (Kansas) had control of the ballgame at the end of the ballgame and we had control of the ballgame, at the end of the ballgame," Snyder said. "We had five drives and 50 snaps coming in five of the first six possessions, and you get points out of three of those, but then there are 20 snaps where you used up a lot of clock, but didn't get any points with."

The game is set for a 6:20 p.m. kickoff and will be broadcast on the Mid America Sports Network.

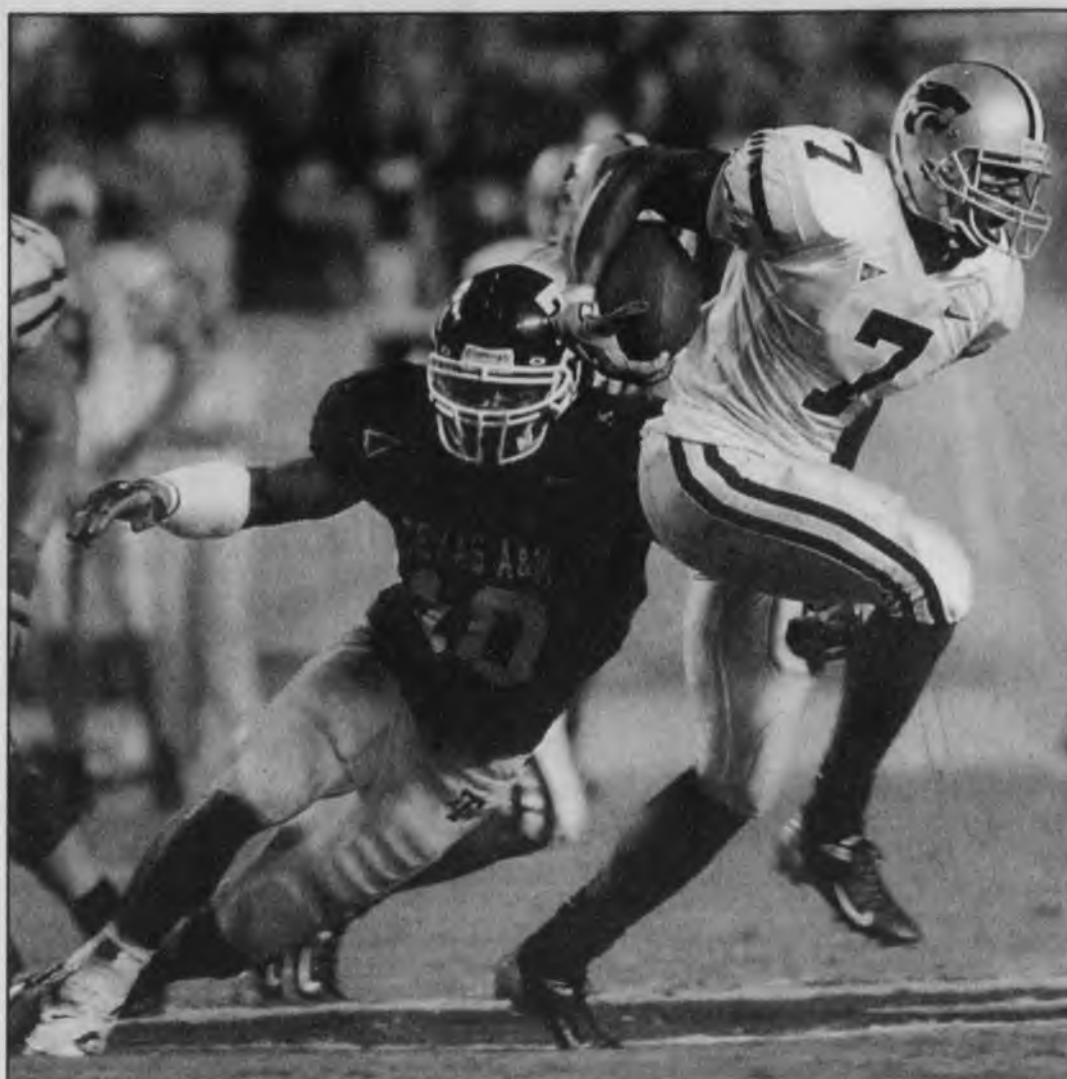

SPROLES STILL THE MAN

Despite Sproles' fumble totals rising, Snyder said he has confidence in the senior running back and will continue to give the ball to him.

"Darren is that type of young guy that I feel confident that when there's anything that would hurt our football team, that Darren would be the first one to promote a change to assist this football team," Snyder said. "He feels confident that he can do what he is doing right now and do it better, and I have faith in him, so we will give him those opportunities and see where it takes us."

With his 61 yards and 120 all-purpose yards against Texas A&M, Sproles came another step closer to two Big 12 records.

Sproles is now 1,017 yards

White House tight-lipped about adequacy of troop levels in Iraq

By Scott Lindlaw
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The White House refused to say Tuesday whether the top U.S. civilian official in Iraq after Saddam Hussein's ouster had asked the president for more troops to deal with the rapid descent of postwar Iraq into chaos.

In remarks published Tuesday, the official, L. Paul Bremer, said he arrived in Iraq on May 6, 2003, to find "horrid" looting and a very unstable situation — throwing new fuel onto the presidential campaign issue of whether the United States had sufficiently planned for the post-war situation in Iraq.

"We paid a big price for not stopping it, because it established an atmosphere of lawlessness," Bremer said during an address to an insurance group in White Sulphur Springs, W.Va. The group released a summary of his remarks in Washington.

"We never had enough troops on the ground," Bremer said, while insisting that he was "more convinced than ever that regime change was the right thing to do."

White House spokesman Scott McClellan refused to say whether Bremer had pleaded with Bush for more troops.

"We never get into reading out all the conversations they had," McClellan said.

In a statement Monday night to The Washington Post, Bremer said he fully supported the Bush administration's strategy in Iraq.

"I believe that we currently have sufficient troop levels in Iraq," he said in the e-mailed statement, according to Tuesday's edition of the Post. He said references to troops levels related to the situation when he first arrived in Baghdad "when I believed we needed either more coalition troops or Iraqi security forces to address the looting."

Bremer addressed the Insurance Leadership Forum, at The Greenbrier resort in West Virginia. Portions of the speech were made available Monday night through a press release from the Council of Insurance Agents & Brokers.

In an earlier speech Sept. 17 at DePauw University, Bremer said he frequently raised the issue of too few troops within the Bush administration and "should have been even more insistent" when his advice was rejected. "The single most important change — the one thing that would have improved the situation — would have been having more troops in Iraq at the beginning and throughout" the occupation, Bremer said, according to the Banner-Graphic in Greencastle, Ind.

Paul Rogat Loeb, author of "Soul of a Citizen: Living with Conviction in a Cynical Time," encourages students to consider the processes behind social movements, in addition to the results themselves. He spoke during the Lou Douglas Lecture Series presentation Tuesday evening in Forum Hall.

Speech urges students to take stand

Author explains how activism supports successful democracy

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Taking a stand was the message Paul Rogat Loeb delivered at his speech Tuesday night.

Loeb, who is the author of five books, including his most recent, "The Impossible Will Take a Little While," was the second speaker for the Lou Douglas Lecture Series this year.

In his speech, Loeb spoke about how Americans are taught to not take a stand on issues.

"There's a real tendency that our culture promotes to just turn away from the big issues," he said.

People are afraid to speak up unless they are sure they are right, he said.

"They need to know everything about it before they take a step," Loeb said. "Part of the challenge is getting past that barrier."

Loeb said society makes ordinary people heroes, because they took action. He used Rosa Parks as an example.

"The CNN version says that here's this incredibly heroic person," he said. "The reality is she's working with other people."

Citizens aren't taught Parks' real story he said. They just know she took a stand on a bus.

Loeb said students should be taught Parks' full story, so they can know more about other lessons Parks taught.

"It doesn't matter where you go; we don't teach this," he said. "All of these lessons get stripped away."

Taking a leap of faith is necessary when taking a stand, Loeb said.

"I would argue that nobody should graduate without taking a course on how to take a stand," he said.

Loeb said because the news media only tells the heroic actions, people can't rely on it to tell them how to act to make a point.

"We're not going to get an actual look on how to act on the media — past or present," he said.

"Rosa Parks didn't know that first meeting she went to she would be taking a stand on the bus."

With current issues, Loeb said activists need to stay persistent, and although their protesting may seem to go unnoticed, they aren't. He used the war in Iraq as an example to support this.

"If nobody had pointed out that this might have a backlash, we wouldn't have the debates we do today," he said. "We would know less now, and we would have less debate."

Loeb attacked the current presidency by saying they are violating democratic principles and are wrong by believing they are always right.

"I find this presidency the most dangerous presidency in the history of the U.S.," he said. "I think we have to take this assault on democracy very seriously."

After the speech, Loeb received a standing ovation from the nearly full Forum Hall. His speech was followed by a question and answer session and a book-signing.

In the question and answer session, Loeb addressed the issue of teaching people about activism and issues that may seem controversial.

"People grow up in this cocoon and think this is the way I'm brought up to see the world," he said. "If we are presenting something people aren't used to, it's going to be an adjustment."

Loeb will meet with K-State faculty today in Union 212 to further discuss how to teach students about activism.

Shanta Bailey, a non-degree seeking graduate student, had Loeb's book, "Soul of a Citizen," signed. She said she had the book for three or four years, and it was useful in teaching an organization about how to be active.

Bailey said he raised some issues that are important right now such as the Iraq war and the economy.

"It challenged some people on issues that seem volatile right now," she said. "This was a medium to weigh these issues."

Mike Durner, graduate student in kinesiology who recently served in Iraq, said he attended the speech for a couple of reasons.

"No. 1, it interests me, because I want to do something to make a change," he said. "Secondly, my graduate seminar class encourages us to go to different lectures or seminars outside of class."

Storm-drainage plan approved

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commissioners on Tuesday approved a storm-drainage extension for a new development in northeast Manhattan.

Each commissioner said the move could be beneficial by adding affordable housing in the city, but two commissioners voted against the resolution because they said it created an unfair financial burden on the city.

"I believe it's appropriate to participate somehow," Commissioner Mark Taussig said.

The city will pay 80 percent of the $704,000 cost of the project, which will add three ponds in the Mission Pond area near Butterfield Road. The area surrounding the improvement would be responsible for the other 20 percent.

City Engineer Jeff Hancock said the project would be an extension of existing storm-drainage upstream in areas to the west.

"The area above it is developed, so the city faces some responsibility," Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

The development area has room for more than 150 new homes, which developer Overlay Properties CEO Russel Weisbender said would be devoted to affordable housing for retirees, starter homes and military housing.

"This is just another effort to create another entry-level neighborhood our community so needs," Weisbender said.

John Armbrust, a member of the Military Strategic Planning Commission, said it is essential the Commission prepare for an increase in military personnel in the community.

Fort Riley could see substantial growth in the near future, he said, and nearby areas will have to meet the demand for more housing.

"I think surrounding communities may have to step up to the plate," Armbrust said.

Commissioner Ed Klimek agreed, adding the school district could gain from additional affordable housing.

"I firmly believe we'll see higher troop numbers in the next year," Klimek said. "I don't know if 80 percent is appropriate, but I believe affordable housing is important."

Senate could see more diversity after election

By Genaro C. Armas
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Voters this fall could take small steps toward increased diversity in the Senate.

After the election, the chamber will have its first black member in six years, and the possibility exists that one or two Hispanic candidates could end a quarter-century absence of Latino representation.

Five female senators are up for re-election in November, and three women are running for open seats. The current composition of the Senate includes a record 14 women, a number unlikely to get bigger.

Three current senators are of a minority background, including Hawaii's two 80-year-old Democrats: Daniel Inouye, son of Japanese immigrants, is up for re-election; and Daniel Akaka, who is of Chinese and Native Hawaiian descent.

The third is retiring Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo., the son of a Portuguese immigrant mother and an American Indian father. The Democrat looking to replace him is state attorney general Ken Salazar, a Hispanic-American locked in a tight race with beer baron Pete Coors, the GOP nominee.

At least one of the 34 Senate races this year is guaranteed to send a minority candidate to Washington. In Illinois, two black candidates — Democratic state legislator Barack Obama and former ambassador Alan Keyes, a Republican — hope to replace GOP Sen. Peter Fitzgerald, who is not seeking a second term.

K-State alumna reflects on university of 1950s, today

Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the parking lot across from Haymaker Hall was a chicken farm and the flood of 1951 hit Manhattan, Carol Cowen worked for K-State.

Cowen has two grandsons at K-State and once worked as a Derby Dining Center employee.

Cowen's children attended K-State and she currently has two grandsons at K-State — one who is a junior in engineering and another who is a freshman at Salina.

"When we first moved down here, there wasn't much past the college but farmland," Cowen said. "The school is a lot bigger now. Where the bull barns used to be was the end of campus."

Cowen said K-State was a school focused mostly on agriculture 50 years ago.

An addition to the university in the 1950s was the K-State Student Union in 1956, which, cost $1.5 million according to the University Archives.

Cowen said the most memorable thing that happened while employed at K-State was the flood of 1951.

"It changed Manhattan, because it did a lot of damage — some things so severely they just took them out," she said. "Tuttle Creek was constructed soon after the flood."

Pat Patton, research specialist at Hale Library, said although the flood hurt the start of the decade, it ended well.

"Even in the early days of K-State students still found a way to have fun," Patton said. "Students would rush down to the campus theater (now Varney's Book Store) after a victorious homecoming game and force the theater to show them free movies."

Ahearn Field House opened in 1950. At the time it was the fifth-largest college arena in the nation, and the basketball team became very successful. KSU basketball won first place in their conference, then the Big Seven Conference, in both 1951 and 1956.

Unfortunately, football did not share in the same success and had only one win in their 1950 season.

"Back then, football was very sad," Patton said. "There was no Willie the Wildcat in the 50s, the mascot was a live bobcat in a cage. That is something that today's students would find interesting."

Cowen said the football games were played at Memorial Stadium and the basketball team competed at Ahearn Field House. Both Cowen and her husband, Virgil, are still dedicated K-State sports fans today.

In 1950-51 the enrollment reached 5,907 students, last year there were 23,050 students enrolled, Patton said.

The tuition in the 1950s has increased, a semester of school was $72.50 for in-state tuition. Out of state students paid $132.50, Patton said.

British officials block flu shot shipment

Blockage raises fears of shortage

Emma Ross
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LONDON — Flu shot shipments by a major vaccine supplier were blocked by British health authorities Tuesday just ahead of the flu season, immediately raising worries that there will not be enough vaccine this year.

"The implications may be significant. There could be a shortage," said Dr. Klaus Stohr, influenza chief at the World Health Organization. "It may be resolvable but that would require a lot of adjustment on the part of the other companies."

The British health regulatory agency said it was suspending the license of vaccine maker Chiron Corp., for three months because of manufacturing problems.

The company provides half of U.S. flu shots.

The suspension means the company will not be able to supply any influenza vaccines to any market during the three months, health officials said.

Chiron, based in California but with a manufacturing plant in Oxford, England, makes four influenza vaccines, including Fluvirin, the top flu vaccine in Northern Europe and the number two vaccine in the United States.

Tuesday's action seemed to catch U.S. health authorities off-guard. In Washington, Health and Human Services spokesman Anthony Jewell said it's not yet clear how the British sanction will affect U.S. supplies. Food and Drug Administration officials are working with their counterparts in Britain and Chiron to determine that, he said.

"We are just learning the details," he said.

Flu shot campaigns usually start in October, a month before the flu season typically begins in the United States. In an average year, flu kills 36,000 people and hospitalizes another 114,000, mostly the elderly.

Chiron had planned to provide the United States between 46 million and 48 million flu shots this year, almost half the nation's supply.

The vaccine maker announced in August some batches of vaccine were contaminated and it was delaying shipment.

But less than two weeks ago, top U.S. health officials assured the public that close FDA monitoring of the rest of Chiron's supply suggested it was fine and that there would be plenty of supplies.

Worldwide, Chiron is the second leading flu vaccine manufacturer, behind French pharmaceutical company Aventis, which makes about 45 percent or 50 percent of the world's supply, Stohr said.

The timing of the license suspension is particularly worrying because vaccine production goes in cycles. The manufacturing cycle for the Northern Hemisphere vaccine finished in August and manufacturers are now gearing up to make the shots for the Southern Hemisphere.

Vaccine makers do not have a lot of spare stock because they produce on demand.

Congress reviews security proposals

By Jesse J. Holland
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A House Republican bill to implement the Sept. 11 panel's recommendations could cost almost $15 billion over five years, congressional budget officials said, as the Senate moved Tuesday to finish its version of the legislation.

The Congressional Budget Office — Congress's non-partisan budget analysts — estimated that the House bill, which creates a national intelligence director as well as increases anti-terrorism, identity theft, illegal immigration and border security powers, could cost $14.9 billion between 2005-2009.

House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., said it would be worth it.

"What does it cost us to have a 9/11 event? What would it cost us to have another 9/11 event?" he asked Tuesday.

The speaker said he thinks "$15 billion is a — and I don't even know if that's correct — sound insurance policy to ensure that we protect the people in this country."

House leaders plan to have their bill up for a final vote later this week. The Senate moved Tuesday to also get a final vote on its bill before the end of the week.

Senators, on an 85-10 vote, decided to limit debate and amendments on their legislation. That makes it more likely that the bill could be finished before the Senate's proposed adjournment date of Friday.

The Senate bill — which the CBO said would cost $700 million before adding the cost of the amendments that senators have added in the last few days — does not contain the various additional powers in the House version.

If the two bills do not match after final passage, the House and Senate must come together in a negotiating committee to hammer out a version that can be sent to the White House for the president's signature.

Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, the chief GOP sponsor of the Senate bill, said Monday that she and chief Democratic sponsor Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., already are meeting with House Intelligence members to try and work out some of the issues.

Colorado student died from alcohol poisoning

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — A University of Colorado freshman found dead at a fraternity house last month died of acute alcohol poisoning, the coroner said Monday.

Lynn Gordon Bailey Jr., 18, of Dallas had a blood alcohol level of .328 percent, about four times the state's legal limit for drunken-driving. The death was accidental and no other drugs were found in Bailey's system, coroner Thomas Faure said in a press release.

Bailey was found in the library of the Chi Psi house just off-campus on Sept. 17. Police said he had participated in a pledge ceremony the night before involving heavy drinking.

The pledges were blindfolded and taken to a field for a bonfire ceremony followed by drinking at the house, consuming 10 bottles of whiskey, six 1.75 liter bottles of wine and three kegs of beer.

Another fraternity pledge, James Cumming, told investigators he saw two fraternity members using markers to write on Bailey about 1 a.m. at the house. Bailey and another pledge were targeted because they had passed out with their shoes on.

Cumming said the brothers became angry when he told them to stop and refused until he got another fraternity member to tell them to quit.

Following Bailey's death, CU Chancellor Richard Byyny asked fraternities and sororities to ban freshmen from joining the groups during their first semester, saying the annual "rush" put too much pressure on inexperienced students.

However, the presidents of the university's fraternities unanimously oppose the change, saying it would cripple their organizations.

The university can influence fraternities and sororities but has no legal authority over them.

The Boulder chapter of Chi Psi was suspended after Bailey's death, and the national group is deciding whether to permanently close it.

Ryun's use of bin Laden image in ad raises questions

By John Hanna
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — When Republican Rep. Jim Ryun used an image of Osama bin Laden in a television ad questioning whether Democratic challenger Nancy Boyda supports American troops abroad, he also sparked questions about his own campaign.

Ryun said his advertisement was a response to Boyda's accusations that Ryun worked to prevent a crackdown on fraudulent insurance sales on military bases. If she questioned his commitment to the troops, he argued, she faced a bigger issue: her participation in protests against the Iraqi war before it began last year.

But in a race that isn't viewed nationally as highly competitive, using bin Laden's image is especially harsh — the equivalent of using a nuclear bomb to clear out a colony of prairie dogs.

The tactic could signal that Ryun is worried, or that he wants to prevent Boyda's challenge from becoming serious, or that he's irritated with her criticism. The ad certainly created a stir.

"It's logical that no one supports Osama bin Laden," said Katie Kidwell, a 20-year-old political science student at Washburn University of Topeka. "To see his face flashed up there — I was just kind of in disbelief."

Ryun's ad, which began airing on TV stations in Topeka and Pittsburg on Sept. 18, notes Boyda helped last year to organize anti-war rallies — weekly events in Johnson County. She also participated in a Washington rally sponsored by AN-SWER Coalition, a national group referring to U.S. involvement in Afghanistan and other nations as "occupation."

would file the charges."

Robinson said she has heard of the charges being dropped from the news media but has not been notified by the attorney or Army. Clay County attorney Douglas Martin could not be reached for comment.

Four other soldiers also with Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry have been charged with the murder of four Iraqi civilians. No further details have been made available.

Staff Sgt. Johnny Horne Jr. and Staff Sgt. Cardenas Alban were charged on Sept. 27 with the death of an Iraqi civilian.

On Sept. 22, Sgt. Michael P. Williams and Spc. Brent W. May were charged with premeditated murder in the death of three Iraqis. Williams also is charged with obstruction of justice and making a false statement.

Approximately 800 soldiers from that unit are serving their second term in Iraq.

On Tuesday, four other soldiers from Fort Carson, Colo., were charged with smothering an Iraqi general interrogation last fall. There were no further details about the incident.

Ten soldiers now have been charged with murdering Iraqis.

and students.

Current students said they were shocked by the news of Murray's arrest.

"I really was surprised," Carla Cassel, junior in English, said. "I was in his class last year when his wife died, and I dealt with all that then. I even had to go to the police station."

Cassel, who is in Murray's American English class, said Murray talked routinely about his daughter and warned students since he was a single parent he might have to miss class if his daughter was sick.

"He talks too much about his daughter, and he loves his daughter too much that I think he wouldn't do something like that," she said.

Cassel had not been contacted by court officials to serve as a witness.

At Murray's church, which he attended weekly, pastors are planning ways to support the congregation and Murray.

"We will be having a time on Sunday for church members to be in support and discuss things to do," said Kent Cormick, pastor of Manhattan's First Congregational Church.

Irigonegaray said an important part of Murray's defense involves the public.

"I think my plan for defense first requires that the good people of this state reserve judgment until this case is tried," he said.

Lauren Heidebrecht does the dishes in the house she shares with her roommates located only a few blocks from Manhattan Christian College. Heidebrecht has made many friends at both the K-State and MCC campuses, including her roommates, she said.

DEGREES | Balancing between 2 schools a challenge

"I wanted to do missions overseas. Then a friend suggested that I could earn dual degrees from both MCC and K-State, and that my outside specialization from K-State would help be more qualified to participate in missions."

Students who choose to earn dual degrees can choose any degree from MCC and K-State.

Though it is convenient for students to have the option of transferring credits between the two schools, it sometimes can be overwhelming to attend both schools, Heidebrecht said.

"We have chapel services on Tuesdays and Thursdays at MCC, and so, of course, classes at MCC are scheduled around them," Heidebrecht said. "But I have to attend classes at K-State on those days, so it involves some sacrifice."

Brax said it is sometimes difficult to pay allegiance to both schools at once.

"When I was a freshman, I attended more classes from MCC, so I felt more loyalty there," Brax said. "But as a junior and senior, my schedule included a more equal amount of hours from each school, and I felt more of a balance."

Despite the complications sometimes involved in attending both schools, the benefits are worth it, Heidebrecht said.

"I feel blessed," Heidebrecht said. "I have the best of both worlds — a close-knit group where I know everyone at MCC, and the larger university, more common college experience from K-State."

DEBATE | Candidates debate past records, proposals of their money being withheld, which is the way it's normally done, because they're under investigation, they've continued to get their money."

Cheney responded by attacking Edwards' Senate record.

"Senator, frankly, you have a record in the Senate that's not very distinguished. You've missed 33 out of 36 meetings in the Judiciary Committee, almost 70 percent of the meetings of the Intelligence Committee," Cheney said. "You've missed a lot of key votes: on tax policy, on energy, on Medicare reform. Your hometown newspaper has taken to calling you Senator Gone. You've got one of the worst attendance records in the United States Senate."

Cheney, 63, and Edwards, 51, sat a few feet apart around a semicircular table. President George W. Bush and his Democratic rival John Kerry debated foreign policy in the first of three presidential debates last Thursday, an encounter that Kerry is widely perceived to have won. There will be two more presidential debates — Friday in a town hall meeting format and Wednesday, Oct. 13 with a focus on domestic policy.

About 50 students watched the debate in the Flint Hills Room followed by a discussion of the candidates' performance. Students and Manhattan residents agreed the candidates were vague in their responses.

"All they were talking about is what they did, but not what they were going to do," Robert Peters, freshman in mass communications, said. "They said they have a plan, but they didn't say it."

Debate watchers were also disappointed in the questions asked by moderator, Gwen Ifill of PBS.

"I wish there would have been more about health care and education," Brent Depperschmidt, senior in economics, said. "Iraq has been the central focus, so we don't hear about the other issues."

For some though, Iraq is the most important issue.

"Iraq and our national security is the most important question," said Ron Forgie, senior in secondary education, said. "I don't care about the environment — it will be here in 100 years."

Sue Peterson, K-State assistant to the president, said while the questions asked didn't address a variety of topics, they answered the questions the voters are asking.

"I think the questions reflected what people are talking about," she said. "We are not delving below the surface. The election is so close, they are so worried about tipping the balance."

It was the two-minute closing statements that caught some students' attentions.

Edwards told a story about watching his father learning math by watching TV.

"I love his little story at the end," Brett King, freshman in chemistry, said. "If I could speak like that, I can see how he made his millions of dollars."

King wore a shirt advertising the Bush/Cheney campaign.

Matt Hryniewicz, sophomore in marketing and finance, said Edwards' ending was just a continuation of his theme of the night.

"I think Edwards' last thing and the theme throughout the debates was he was more human and positive," he said.

Cheney's edginess was also effective, said Amelia Roudebush, senior in public relations and speech communication.

"While I don't agree with him, I do admire his sound bites and slight jabs," she said.

Cheney's closing statement focused on the fear after the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks.

"At the end his emphasis was fear," David MacFarland, professor of mass communications, said. "You have fear, so you better stick with us."

Voting options available as registration deadline looms

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last day to register to vote, Oct. 18, is approaching quickly, so for those who haven't registered and plan to vote, time is running out.

First, students need to decide if they want to vote in Riley County or at an out-of-county location.

Rich Vargo, Riley County Clerk and election official, said students can vote in Manhattan if they register with their Manhattan address.

Voters have to vote where they register their address, he said.

Since the last presidential election, a new Kansas law requires identification for new residents in the county they want to vote in, Vargo said.

"Only if you are a first time voter in that county you need to show an ID," he said.

Voters have to show their ID to an official in the Clerk's office, he said. They can do this before, the day of or after election day.

Voters who haven't shown their ID are able to by the Friday or Monday after the election day, but they are just provisional ballots, he said.

"On election night those are only provisional ballots," Vargo said.

Identification can be one of several items, he said.

"It can be a K-State ID, utility bill or driver's license, but it has to have the same address," Vargo said. "There's a long list of things that qualify as an ID."

Michelle Coonrod, account clerk, said students need to contact their local county or state if they want to vote from there.

In Kansas, there is only regular voting or advanced voting, which takes the place of absentee voting.

Vargo said the difference between the two is with absentee voting you need a reason, and anyone can vote in advance.

Coonrod said there are 26 polling places in Riley County, and new voters in the county will receive a card beforehand that will say where they vote.

She said if students write Manhattan in as their address the county election will consider them a Kansas resident.

"Registering to vote is one process to becoming a Kansas resident," she said.

Brad Palmer, fifth year in architectural engineering, said he is going to vote in Missouri, because that is where he is from.

"That's where my permanent address is," he said.

Students should vote because voting is a way to be active and have a voice, he said.

"I feel like it's my right and duty," Palmer said.

CIA report claims Saddam did not have WMD

By Ken Guggenheim
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Contradicting the main argument for the Iraq war, the top U.S. arms inspector reported Wednesday he found no evidence Iraq produced any weapons of mass destruction after 1991. The report also says Saddam Hussein's weapons capability weakened during a dozen years of U.N. sanctions before the U.S. invasion last year.

Saddam did not have chemical and biological stockpiles when the war began and his nuclear capabilities were deteriorating, not advancing, according to the report by Charles Duelfer, head of the Iraq Survey Group.

But Duelfer also supports Bush's argument that Saddam remained a threat. Interviews with the toppled leader and other former Iraqi officials made clear to inspectors that Saddam had not lost his ambition to pursue weapons of mass destruction and hoped to revive his weapons program if sanctions were lifted, the report said.

Duelfer presented his findings in a report of more than 1,000 pages, and in appearances before Senate committees.

The report avoids direct comparisons with prewar claims by the Bush administration on Iraq's weapons systems. But Duelfer largely reinforces the conclusions of his predecessor, David Kay, who said in January, "We were almost all wrong" on Saddam's weapons programs. The White House did not endorse Kay's findings then, noting that Du-elfer's team was continuing to search for weapons.

Duelfer found that Saddam gradually began ending prohibited weapons programs starting in 1991. But as Iraq started receiving money through the U.N. oil-for-food program and as enforcement of the sanctions weakened, Saddam was able to take steps to rebuild his military, such as acquiring parts for missile systems.

Parking board considers 24/7 lot patrols

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Parking Services is considering the application of parking restrictions all day, every day.

Darwin Abbot, director of Parking Services, said the current restrictions apply between 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. in certain areas.

He said a large number of people use the parking lots for free after these hours and that their after-hours use is unfair to those with valid parking permits.

Areas like the K-State Union and the Alumni Center have had events that lasted until 10 p.m., and costs incurred for lighting these areas and other safety measures could not be mitigated by allowing free parking.

Abbot said discussions had begun on constructing parking garages and making the restrictions all the time would help raise the money for the expenses.

"If I'm paying should they not pay as well to defray the costs?" he said. Abbot said the parking council would need to approve the final plan, and this was still a couple of years away.

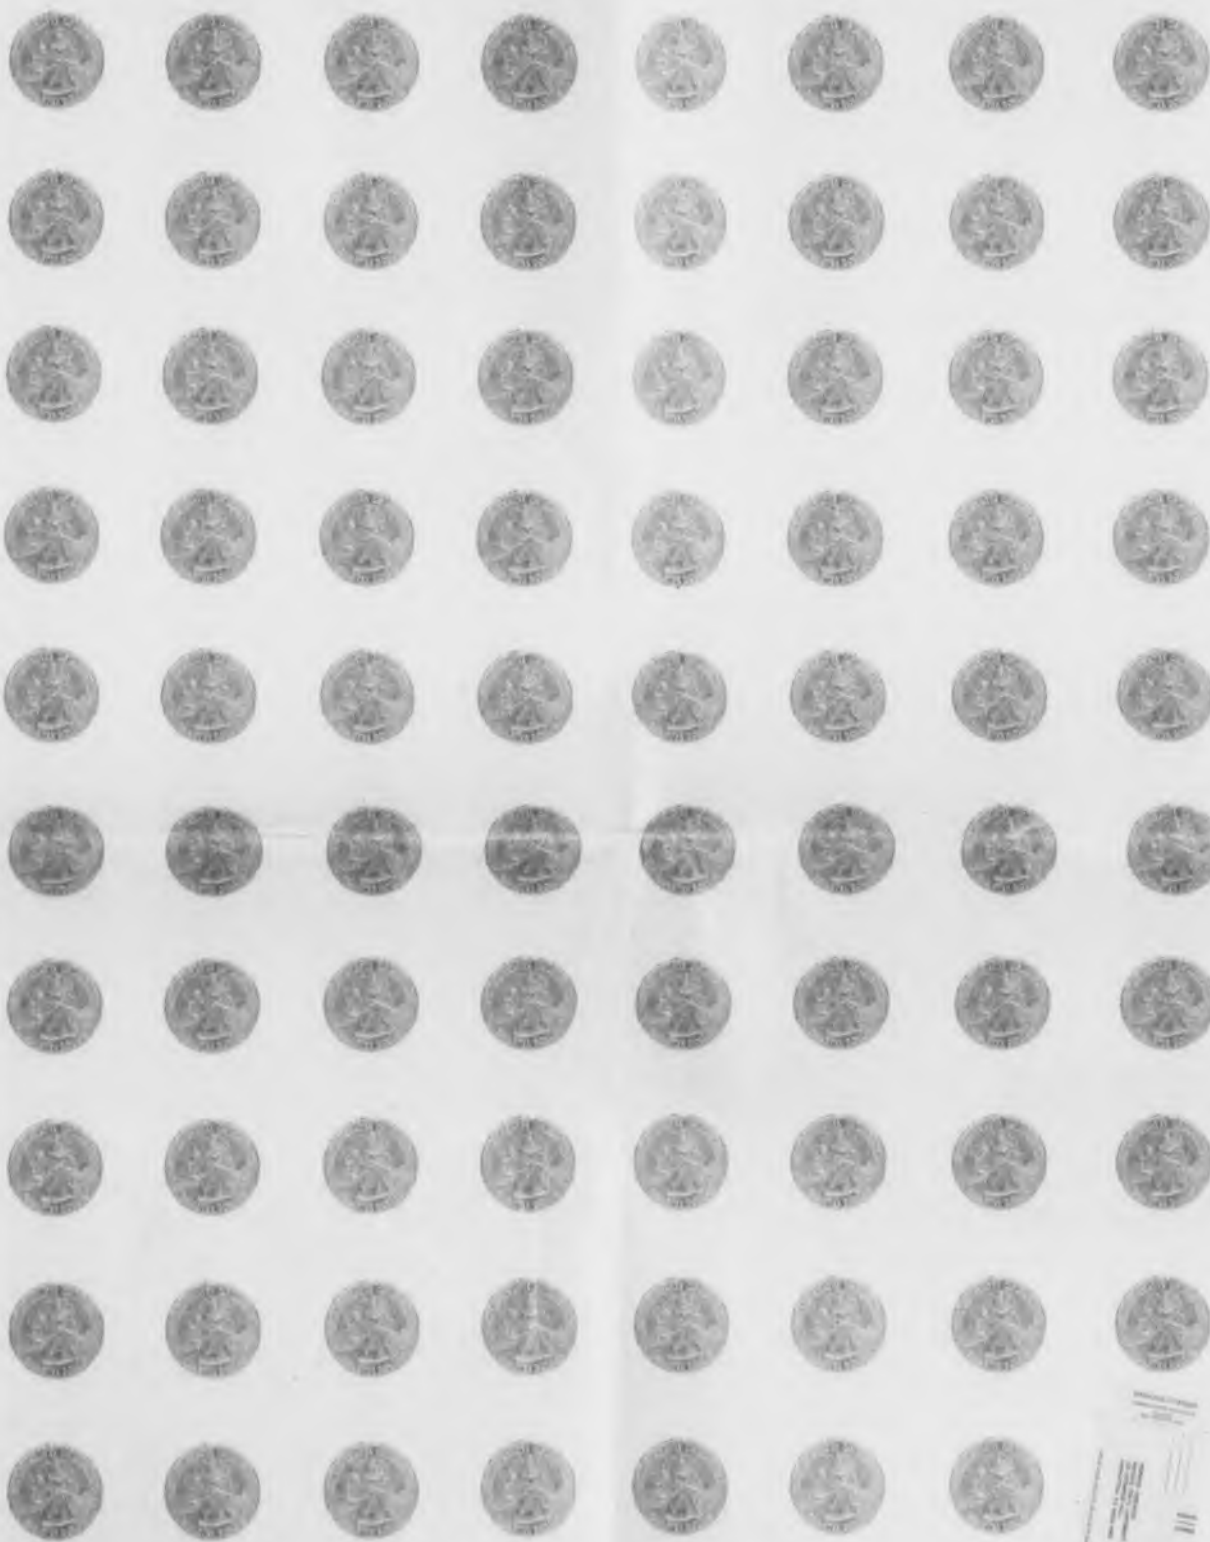

Thomas Bean, parking control officer, said he needed to check for incorrect parking and those parking without permits. Bean said parking permits had to be displayed clearly and visibly.

"The restrictions that are in effect now are good. I see no need for 24/7 restrictions," he said.

Vicki Conner, member of the University Parking Council, said the same amount of wear and tear occurred in the parking lots, both during days and nights, but it cost more to maintain the lots at night.

Conner said several students used the library or were members of different groups across campus and need safe parking environments at night.

"I am strongly opposed to the idea of charging students for parking at night,"

K-State student ambassador applications due today in Alumni Center

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who want to apply to be a K-State Student Ambassador must exert certain qualities, Student Ambassador Kristy Tredway said.

"Applicants should be experienced and confident talking to prospective students and alumni," she said. "They should be well-spoken and knowledgeable about the university."

Student Ambassador Seth Sanders said he agreed.

"They should not only have knowledge, but passion and love for the university that is seen by people you meet," he said.

Sanders said his experience as an ambassador taught him things that would be useful in the future.

"I learned people skills, presentation skills and how to present myself in public," he said.

Tredway said she enjoyed seeing things she hadn't seen before.

"Being a K-State ambassador gave me a true appreciation for the university in all aspects," she said. "I got to see the wonderful things that go on behind the scenes."

Those who are interested in becoming a student ambassador must first submit an application to the Alumni Center.

The application is then reviewed, and students are selected to meet before a panel of student leaders, said Tom Roesler, associate director of alumni programs.

Students selected to advance to the next round must meet before a panel consisting of faculty, staff and alumni, Roesler said.

"The finalists from that are Week, and students will vote for the ambassadors on Oct. 28 from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.," he said.

Tredway said applicants need to know what they want to do.

"My first advice would be to know you are passionate about the university and want to make it a better place," she said. "I want to stress that desire because it is a time commitment and a key role on campus."

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Politicians consider re-instating the draft

BOULDER, Colo. — The lives of every 18 to 26 year old could be dramatically affected later this week when HR 163 comes before the House of Representatives.

The bill, called the "Universal National Service Act of 2003," would require all young persons in the United States, including women, to perform military or civilian service for national defense, homeland security or domestic service.

"Our plan simply says that everyone is required to do public service for a period of time," said Rep. Jim McDermott, D-Wash., who co-introduced the legislation last year.

Critics of the bill, however, call it a military draft. And rumors around the University of Colorado and campuses across the country have held that a military draft for college-age students is a looming threat following the November elections.

The requirement of registering for the draft for male youths of our society exists still today under the Military Selective Service Act (50 USC 451).

"While the president can issue the order, Congress has to issue the funds," said Michael Kanner, a political science professor at CU who met the standards to be drafted in 1974, but enlisted into the military a year earlier.

Some think that in an election year, some say the idea of a draft is just partisan politics being played out in Washington.

"Any suggestion that a military draft is forthcoming is nothing more than an election-year scare tactic and an example of demagoguery at its worst," wrote Rep. Joel Hefley, R-Colo., in an e-mail to the Colorado Daily.

While others don't think it is partisan politics, there is agreement that the idea of a draft or mandatory national service would not receive much support, if any at all.

"The draft is not a popular idea with people, with Congress or with the President," said Sen. Wayne Allard, R-Colo., who serves on the Senate Armed Service subcommittee on Emerging Threats and Capabilities. "The draft will not happen."

There are only two people talking about it Sen. Fritz Hollings, D-S.C. and Rep. Charlie Rangel, D-N.Y., authors of service act bills in the House and Senate.

"It is stronger medicine than we need right now," said Rep. Mark Udall, a Colorado Democrat whose 2nd Congressional District encompasses Boulder and CU.

"The vote won't even be close; even Charlie Rangel will vote against his own bill."

As the question of staffing levels of the military looms, some believe the possibility of a draft is the biggest issue for youth voters. Even if it isn't, Udall said, it could be a catalyst for the youth vote.

"The fact that a draft is even being discussed (on a congressional and presidential level) shows how important it is for youth to vote," said Udall.

ALCOHOL CASES CLOG SCHOOL JUDICIAL SYSTEM

HANOVER, N.H. — It might not come as much of a surprise to students, but a significant majority of those who tangle with Dartmouth College's disciplinary system do so because of alcohol, official Dartmouth reports indicate.

For the third straight year, roughly 60 percent of the cases entering the disciplinary system this past academic year resulted in students being found responsible for either public intoxication or underage possession of alcohol, according to the latest Office of Undergraduate Judicial Affairs report.

In all, 261 students were found responsible for public intoxication and 85 received violations for underage possession of alcohol, the report stated.

This represented 68 percent of sanctions, down slightly from last year.

In a particularly serious incident involving drinking this past year, one intoxicated student started a fire in a residence hall stairwell and then ran away, in the end getting expelled from the college.

The incident, described in the report as "not typical," was one of 588 disciplinary cases handled by the College during the 2003-04 academic year.

Iranian weapons plan confirmed

Official tells of steps taken toward uranium enrichment

By Ali Akbar Dareini
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran has produced a few tons of the gas needed to enrich uranium, a top nuclear official indicated Wednesday, confirming the country has defied international demands and taken a necessary step toward producing nuclear fuel — or nuclear weapons.

The White House, which has been pressuring its allies to punish Iran for its nuclear ambitions, again accused Tehran of trying to build nuclear weapons and urged it Wednesday to suspend all enrichment activities.

Uranium hexafluoride gas is the material that, in the next stage, is fed into centrifuges used to enrich uranium. Uranium enriched to a low level is used to produce nuclear fuel to generate electricity; enriched further, it can be used to manufacture atomic bombs.

Iran said last month that it has started converting about 40 tons of raw uranium being mined for enrichment — plans the international community specifically said it found alarming. Iran maintains its intentions are peaceful energy purposes.

Hossein Mousavian, Iran's chief delegate to the International Atomic Energy Agency, would not specify how much hexafluoride gas had been produced, but said a few tons of raw uranium — also known as yellowcake — had been converted. The conversion process yields nearly the same amount of hexafluoride gas.

Iranian and Western nuclear experts agreed a few tons of yellowcake would produce a few tons of the gas used for enrichment.

"When you convert raw uranium, you get more or less the same amount of hexafluoride gas," said Hossein Afarideh, an Iranian lawmaker who holds a doctorate in nuclear energy.

However, hexafluoride gas repeatedly spun in centrifuges yields a far smaller amount of low-grade uranium that can be used for fuel — and even less weapons-grade uranium.

Big Cats seek to re-establish official athletic sponsorship

Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Big Cats are climbing onto more than just really tall stilts.

They are climbing their way back into the athletic department, that is, after they thought they had been denied program sponsorship on August 23.

Dave Plumb, senior in psychology and co-captain of Big Cats, said the reconstruction of the athletic department has been the major cause for miscommunication this year.

"It was our understanding that the athletic department was fully cutting us off from their programs," he said. "And that included permitting us to go to football games and getting funding."

Now things are different, Plumb said.

Under the reconstruction of the program, Big Cats will not have a coach at this point in the year, he said.

"We usually are a self-running student group," Plumb said.

Al Enlow, cheerleading and

"They may not have a coach, but the athletic department supports them and works with them when scheduling events."

mascot coach, said eventually a coach may be assigned to the squad.

Plumb said a coach is not necessary for the Big Cats.

"We practice and teach each other how to become a better team, so a coach is not necessary at this point in the year," Plumb said.

Enlow said it's necessary for the Big Cats to have some sponsorship.

"They may not have a coach, but the athletic department supports them and works with them when scheduling events," Enlow said.

Plumb said the Big Cats attend numerous events.

"We do events ranging from Fun Night during homecoming to the grand opening of businesses," Plumb said. "Plus we get money from the athletic department and for the events we attend."

Yet one of the larger changes for Big Cats is football, he said.

"So far, we are not a part of the cheer squads on the football field," Plumb said. "We are trying to work out a deal with the athletic department sometime soon."

Big Cats are a great part of the K-State Football experience, he said.

"We are one of the few inter-active cheer squads out there," Plumb said. "We connect students, the community, and children together."

Plumb said until getting back onto the field, the Big Cats are ready to have fun.

"Despite the changes, we 11 Big Cats will stand proud," Plumb said.

Turkey may begin EU membership talks

By Constant Brand
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium — The European Union's head office on Wednesday recommended the start of EU membership talks for Turkey but said the negotiations could be halted if Ankara backtracks on sweeping democratic and human rights reforms — a condition that angered Turkey's prime minister.

If membership talks start early next year, as Ankara hopes, Turkey would not actually join the union until around 2015.

While Turkey's foot is now in the door of the European club — a key success after years of lobbying — it still must show it can meet the EU demands, with European officials warning talks could be suspended or even stopped if reform does not go forward.

"It is a qualified yes," European Commission President Romano Prodi, when speaking to European parliament leaders, said of the commission recommendation.

TO THE POINT School should dismiss night parking idea

Taken at face value, it might seem reasonable and fair to maintain parking restrictions on campus after hours.

However, there are significant difficulties associated with this proposal.

In the first place, personnel would have to be assigned to enforce such a policy.

Aside from the additional hazards patrolling at night would pose to Parking Services employees, there is the issue of how to afford additional payroll expenses.

Obviously, issuing tickets for unpaid meters and illegal parking would offset some of those costs; however, we should not be relying on those to pay for Parking Services.

Additionally, those who are parking on campus in the evenings are probably attending events on our campus.

Whether they have parking permits or not, they are the guests of our university.

We should treat those attending performances at McCain Auditorium or lectures in Forum Hall with respect and hospitality.

That doesn't include requiring them to leave plays halfway through to feed the meter or sending them home with bright yellow parking tickets.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The boozing right

Activism could lead to lowering of drinking age

Some students at the University of Kansas have a plan that would make Silverado Saloon tons more popular — they want to lower the drinking age back to 18.

The KU students, led by Jared Loehr, presumably got tired of protesting other things and sought a new challenge.

For everything that university does wrong they got this one right.

Before 1985, Kansans under 18 could drink beer with alcohol content below 3.2. Then, it all went downhill.

In the strong tradition of the Jayhawks, the students started the Political Activist Club to protest the law.

In Lawrence, if you're bored, you protest.

It's like Manhattan and throwing stuff off bridges.

According to The Kansas City Star, the group has organized a march in Lawrence before the KU-K-State football game on Saturday. They're expecting a crowd of three hundred to join them.

One of the group's primary arguments against the law is if you're old enough to defend your country (or conquer/liberate/occupy another, depending on your views), then you are old enough to have a beer after you torch the conquered cities.

Unfortunately, the military recently put a stop to the beer-for-soldiers fund-raiser.

But those soldiers, many of them fresh from high school, deserve to choose whether they want a beer when they return.

There are other reasons 18-year-olds deserve the right to drink, though.

We gave them the vote — if they're electing our officials, shouldn't our officials give them what they want?

Of course they should.

But the fact is, because most 18-year-olds aren't exercising their right to vote, they won't get the right to drink.

Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco once said he thought the drinking age was raised to 21 only because politicians had no fear of young voters. If college-aged voters would push issues important to them, they could affect change.

But we don't.

Young voters continue to sit idly as the right to drink vanishes and the draft and mandatory service creeps into discussions on Capitol Hill.

Oh, well. We're too lazy to join the Peace Corps.

Maybe it'll be good for us.

If for no other reason, voters under 21 need to mobilize to get some of the cool new products the booze companies come up with — specifically, B to the E.

The new drink — bound to be the envy of all of high society — has a mathematically expressed name and potentially fun-inducing side effects.

College students could have a new best friend in the drink, which is 6.6 percent alcohol and contains as much caffeine as a can of Mountain Dew, the "urine of the gods."

It's usefulness is potentially endless.

Students can use the new beer as a peppy way to start their day, in lieu of a bland cup of coffee or boring soda.

For Thursday-night parties, the drink can help maintain your buzz and still be awake for your Friday-morning class.

The wonder drink is due out next month — too bad most students won't be able to enjoy it until their junior year.

Netizens can do without junk e-mail

I remember when checking my inbox was a simple, painless task. That was back in the 90's, before the word spam had been coined.

But now even with a trusty spam filter, I am forced to wade through mountains of unsolicited e-mail.

Girls named Jenny with bone cancer, special offers, warnings about corporations who support Satanism and the endless pleas from Nigerian diplomats to assist them in transporting them out of the country.

I don't really mind being spammed; it's the price of being a dutiful netizen.

What I do mind is when my well-meaning Aunt Debbie or a concerned friend from band camp tricks me into wasting time opening inane bits of useless garbage.

I know they are motivated by a desire to save me from the terrifying JDBGMGR.exe virus or toxic tampons or political candidates who think John 3:16 is really John 16:3.

The only problem is there is no such virus, no toxic tampon, no candidate who doesn't know their own favorite Bible verse. These are mere urban legends, old wives tales if you will, given their own Internet spin.

Luckily for concerned citizens such as myself, a lovely woman and her husband, Barbara and David Mikkelsen, have devoted their lives to sorting out fact from fiction on the Web.

The Mikkelsons' Web site, www.Snopes.com, contains archives of hundreds of strange facts and rumors, provided to the curious, free of charge.

Thanks to them, there is really no need to terrify your friends and family with stories of perverted pollsters asking to examine body parts or soft drinks invented by Nazis, unless you derive a sort of gruesome pleasure from it, as I suspect many of you do.

Next time you get a tearjerker about little Dylan killed by Resolve Carpet Cleaner or the horrifying news that John Edwards is nasty to his neighbors, resist the urge to press the forward button until you have checked it out and ensured what you are about to pass on is accurate.

Rumors about corporations, institutions or cities can often be checked simply by finding their Web site or making a phone call.

Take a stand and insist that vicious Web rumors will stop with you.

Shocking news that is true needs to be passed along, but urban myths only waste time, abuse emotions and increase the likelihood that you'll find yourself on the blocked list of many friends.

And who knows, the next Web rumor might be true and it might be about free food and you may miss out when it gets lost in the spam.

And you wouldn't want that, would you?

Barbara is a senior in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Iraq and our national security is our most important issue. I don't care about the environment; it will be here in a hundred years. Are you serious?

Hey K-State, fourth year here, fourth article on caffeine, get some new material.

If John Edwards can miss 89 percent of his meetings, I think we should be allowed to miss 89 percent of our classes. Go ketchup!

I'm voting for Dukakis.

I am a knight who says "NI!"

I don't know about everyone else, but I am extremely pissed off about the way Nip/Tuck ended. We have to wait until June!

Ahhhhh!

To the jerk who had my car towed from Wildcat Landing: it cost $95 for the towing and another $25 for a parking ticket. Now I don't have enough money for rent. Thanks.

To the guy standing on the K-State sign with the big 'ol posters: God bless you.

Thanks to fire alarms going off in Thompson Hall, we got out of financial reporting on time for the first time ever.

If I need a microscope to see it, it's not a human.

OK, so in my hour and fifteen minute class today, my teacher just devoted an hour of it to wearing a clown hat and juggling and trying to relate it to life. Very noble, but at the same time, very, very odd.

I'm afraid to go to my English class now.

There's a game at Chucky Cheese where if you put in a dollar, you get four quarters. I win every time.

What the hell is it with the bees on campus? Can somebody control that?

I saw some guy standing on the corner with signs that read "Smile, you'll live longer." I flipped him off.

Violence levels will increase once more in Washington, D.C., if lawmakers repeal handgun laws

THE DAILY CAMPUS
U. CONNECTICUT

STORRS, Conn. — On Sept. 30, the U.S. House of Representatives voted 250-171 in favor of ending the 28-year ban on handgun ownership in the District of Columbia.

The bill, to pass through Senate next year, would also bring about an end to the registration of guns in the district and legalize the possession of semi-automatic weapons. Considering "Washington's ban on handguns was an attempt to remedy the unseemly amount of violent crime in the chaotic district."

D.C.'s extensive history of violence, as the city was not long ago the murder capital of the nation, the repeal of this ban is both counterintuitive and dangerous.

Washington's ban on handguns attempted to remedy the unseemly amount of violent crime in the chaotic district. The ban was a refreshingly commonsense decision made with the safety of residents in mind, and should be respected by the House.

The majority of residents and lawmakers of the District of Columbia have expressed a desire to keep the ban, believing that its removal would jeopardize the safety of the city's inhabitants. Yet Congress continues the effort to repeal that which Washington residents hold dear.

Those against the ban on handguns have cited the Bill of Rights as reason to vote for its repeal, believing it is a violation of the right to bear arms, a protection assured by the Second Amendment. Truly, it is not the place of the House of Representatives to be questioning the constitutionality of the city's law. Rather, it is the job of the courts, up to and including the U.S. Supreme Court, to determine whether or not this law is of an unjust nature.

The existing ban is not actually a violation of Second Amendment rights. The current law does not prevent individuals from possessing rifles or shotguns, so long as they remain in the home and are either in locked containers or disassembled.

While these restrictions may be strong, the city is justified in having them. Washington is a town in which murder was once commonplace. It is a place where child killings are still on the rise. Having a law restricting gun possession and usage is not repressive; it's intelligent. Rights should always be respected but, considering one's right to bear arms often interferes with an individual's right to live, gun rights cannot be regarded as rights that should go without limitations.

Pot prohibition equals blowing smoke

THE DAILY IOWAN
U. IOWA

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Before getting all hyped up about the big "M" word — yes, marijuana — rest assured this is not a case radically calling for its complete legalization. Far from it.

However, the contention that use of marijuana in limited amounts, without the intention to resell, should not be immediately punished with arrest is a viable one. It's far more sensible to sanction such an act with a simple citation than to treat it as a crime for which the offender can be incarcerated, as is the case in much of the United States.

This is exactly what the Chicago police Sgt. Tom Donegan was trying to communicate when he proposed this policy. Moreover, Mayor Richard M. Daley has endorsed it in the interest of saving the courts from petty (but costly) cases that tend to be thrown out by judges anyway.

Beyond this, there are numerous reasons to support the reform, not just in Chicago but on a national level. One concerns where society places its priorities in fighting crime.

Given the choice between

spending valuable resources to apprehend murderers and sexual predators versus jailing nonviolent pot users, the choice is a no-brainer. Handcuffing people caught smoking joints and sending them to the county jail is hardly rational when many such places already face.

There is no doubt whether the use of marijuana is injurious to health and should be penalized in some form. Its surreptitious and illicit distribution is even more problematic. However, we should keep in mind that policies concerning pot use are similar to what once existed for alcohol use — specifically, the failed attempt to stop consumption of alcohol through Prohibition.

Government surveys show that nearly 100 million Americans have now used marijuana, an all-time record, and marijuana use by teenagers remains near record levels. The National Research Council looked at this data and concluded that stricter laws and tougher punishments have minimal effect on marijuana use. Furthermore, the Marijuana Policy Project argues that states should go even further, decriminalizing marijuana use and possession entirely, because no solid proof has been produced thus far showing a causal relationship between tough laws and lower marijuana use.

Rather than employing extreme methods, as was once done with alcohol, it makes more sense to put into effect a system of regulation in which marijuana possession and use is a less-serious offense and can be controlled not through stiff jail time but through a simple fine. This will save time, money, and much-needed jail space. Smoking pot is not a violent crime; it shouldn't be treated as such.

Admitting males to all-female school should not be met with protests contradictory to progress

DAILY ILLINI
U. ILLINOIS

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Wells College has been an all-female school for 136 years, but because of dwindling enrollment and financial difficulties, the board of trustees has decided a change in recruitment techniques is needed.

As a result, more than 170 female Wells College students — roughly one third of the 400-member student body — are protesting the college's decision to admit male students next fall. After Wells' board of trustees passed the landmark decision on Saturday, female students have continuously slept in the lobby of the administration building, camped out on its front lawn and papered hallways with signs that read, "Coeducation silences women."

The actions of these students are misguided. Protesting this decision creates a double standard for women and damages the efforts women have made in the pursuit of equal rights.

Since 1960, the number of all-female colleges has dropped from 298 to 66. Many of these colleges were founded as sister schools to complement colleges that at one time were exclusively male.

Thankfully, times have changed, and most of these colleges have either merged or become coed. Today, single-sex colleges are the exception rather than the rule.

The admission of men should be a gradual process. Students should have the option to continue their studies in single-sex classes. Residence halls should remain single-sex for now. Wells College should continue to admit students based on merit rather than on gender quotas.

However, the notion that men in the classroom will silence women is unlikely in this case. If anything, men who are admitted to Wells College will be intimidated by the atmosphere and traditions of an all-female college. Educators likely will be self-conscious of the need to make sure participation in the classroom is equal and fair.

Furthermore, those who argue that the all-female student body should be maintained out of respect for tradition are missing the point. Just because something is old or traditional doesn't make it any better or more valid.

For women to be seen as equals, Wells College cannot be wholly female. What message does it send when women demand that all-male military academies open their doors but request that the doors to all-female colleges remain shut?

Vector Marketing misleads college-aged reps with too-good-to-be-true promises of easy cash

SIDELINES
MIDDLE TENNESSEE STATE U.

MURFREESBORO, Tenn. — Once in a great while a door-to-door salesperson might actually have something worthwhile. But most of the time, you should be pretty suspicious of that case of frozen chicken.

A company called Vector Marketing, which sells kitchen knives to bored housewives, regularly recruits salespeople on college campuses, and many students across the country have been duped into believing their pitches.

Two states have already taken Vector to court for deceiving students into agreeing to sell their knives, earning less than $3 a day doing so.

Depending on who you ask, the situation could be profitable.

Some students at Middle Tennessee State University have had good experiences with these companies but having experienced the pitch ourselves, it sounds better than the reality of the situation.

Students should be wary when accepting offers like these. If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

Jobs like this don't pay an hourly wage, and students must depend on commissions, which come few and far between. I mean, really, who wants to sell knives all day long? You'd be bored enough to consider buying them yourself.

Although Vector's managers will say there is no telemarketing involved, students have to make cold calls and appointments before visiting a house.

Some students have even been asked to purchase a demonstration model. Don't accept a job that requires you to pay money up front. That's about as legitimate as modeling agencies that require payment to get your picture taken.

It's easy to be taken for a ride when managers close to your age give you a line about how it will improve your "marketing skills."

However, take a few days to think about the situation on your own, free from the pestering of a Vector manager.

More than likely, any student would be better off working at McDonald's. Even though you've just sold your soul to the corporate devil, you are assured of minimum wage and maybe a free burger as well.

Cats keep up winning stride against KU

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second straight year, the women's volleyball team was pushed to the limit on the road at Kansas. And for the second straight year, the Wildcats responded and won the match 3-2.

No. 16 K-State defeated Kansas 30-19, 23-30, 30-25, 22-30 and 15-12 to beat the Jayhawks for the 19th straight time. The win moves the Wildcats to 11-4 on the year and 5-1 in the Big 12. Kansas drops to 10-5 and 1-5 in the conference.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she thought her team made great strides with the win.

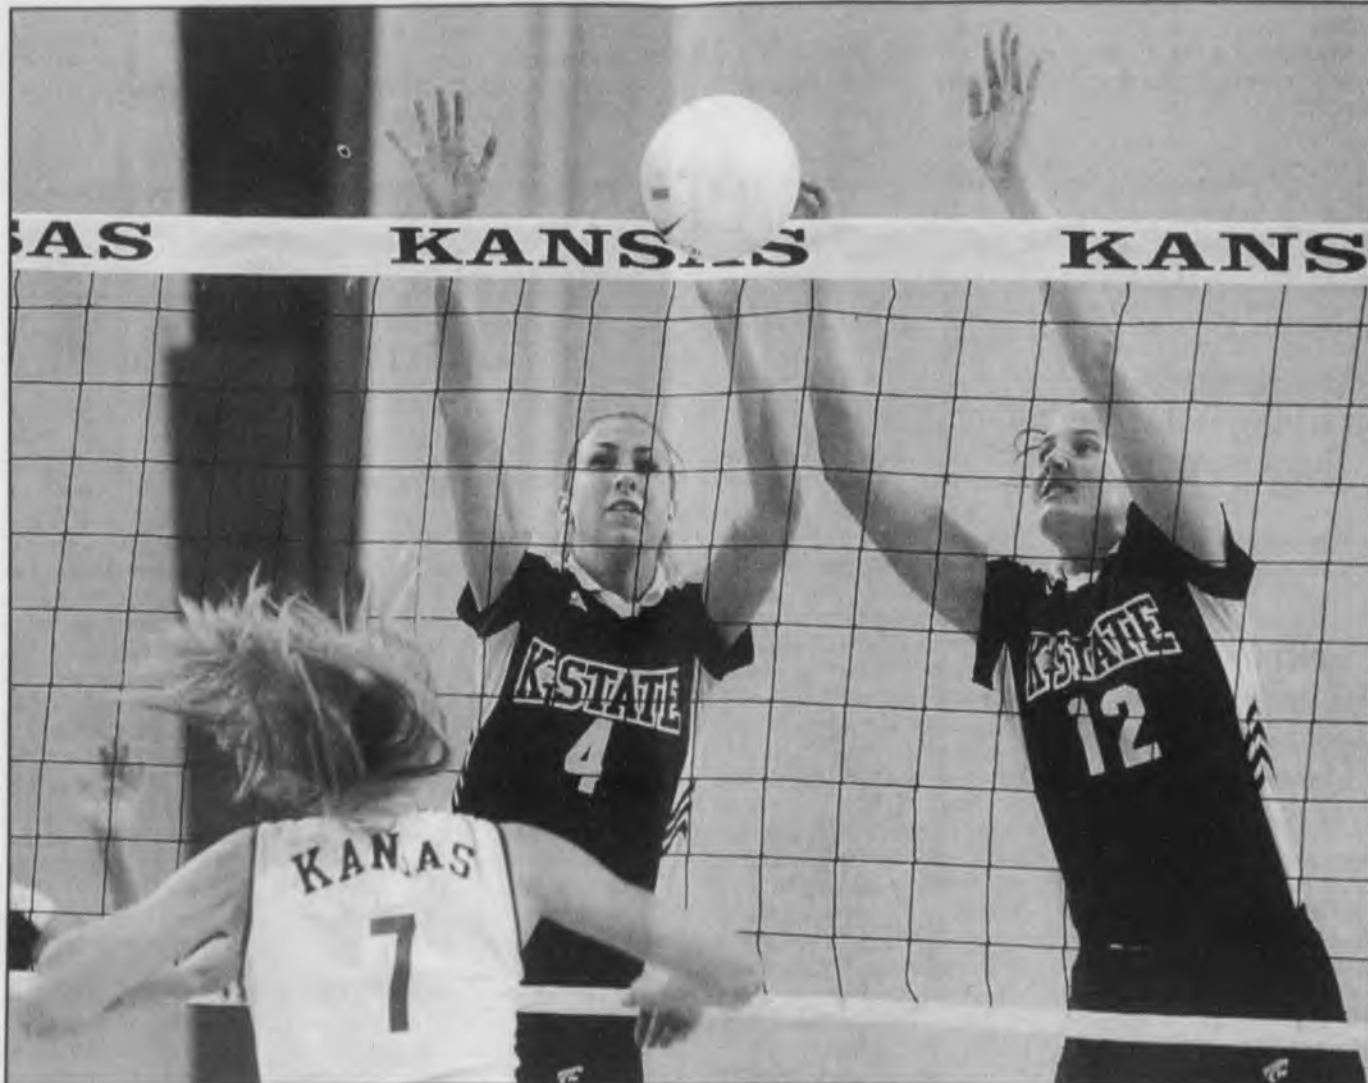

"I think we had a little breakthrough tonight as a team, in that we realized that we could play well under pressure," Fritz said. "We were in a difficult spot. Our backs were up against the wall, and I thought our team responded great. I thought they responded tremendously."

After taking the first game, the Wildcats wasted a 7-0 run in the second game before losing. The teams then split games three and four, and then K-State gained three-point leads twice in game five before finally putting the Jayhawks away.

Fritz said Kansas is a very talented team that gave K-State all it could handle.

"They made us play very well," she said. "They're a very good team. They're easily a top 25, top 30 team if not higher. They had to endure some injuries, and their personnel have been ever-changing. Once they get some people healthy they're going to do some damage."

The Wildcats were led by senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas' 19-kill performance. Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin added 15 kills on .438 hitting,

No Dez, no problem. So said Coach Jim Wooldridge and several members of the K-State men's basketball team last week as the team prepared for a four-game exhibition tour taking place Friday through Tuesday in Vancouver, British Columbia.

In August, Dez Willingham unexpectedly left the team, leaving a void at starting point guard, but Wooldridge said he is very confident in three newcomers — sophomore Fred Peete and freshmen Clint Stewart and Curtis Allen — to step

"They're like sponges," said Wooldridge of the trio's performances in practices so far. "They've picked things up quickly and showed play-making ability. They each bring something, and when you put it all together, they really add something to the team."

The NCAA allowed the Wildcats to practice ten times in preparation for the foreign exhibition tour.

Wooldridge said his team will reap nothing but positive benefits from the practices and the tour, as it searches for Getting tested for deadly disease could save your life

I would like to take the opportunity to focus on a more serious side of the sporting world.

Athletes of all kinds push their bodies to the extreme. No pain, no gain.

Specifically, football players participate in a very physical, tough and painful sport. Sometimes the game of football turns deadly, and an athlete's life is lost.

However, in today's sporting world, athletes' lives are taken more frequently by illnesses or diseases that show no effects until it is too late.

K-State is not immune to this situation.

In July 2000, Anthony Bates, a football player at K-State, died suddenly from a disease known as Hypertrophic Cardiomyopathy, or HCM. He was 20 years old at the time, and the loss stung the K-State and Manhattan communities hard.

Specifically, HCM is a genetic heart disease resulting in a thickening of the heart muscle. Over time, blood flow can become restricted, and the heart can start to beat erratically. If HCM goes undetected, as in the case of Bates, it can lead to sudden death.

HCM has no symptoms, but often people who have it experience shortness of breath, lightheadedness, chest pains or blackouts. Often, young athletes make up the majority of cases of HCM because of the stress a sport can exert on the heart.

Another incident indirectly involving K-State happened recently.

This past June, McCollins Umeh, a freshman football player at the University of Arizona, collapsed and died during a voluntary practice. The autopsy reported Umeh died of a collapsed lung, the result of HCM.

Umeh was at one time a K-State football recruit and had even committed to play for the Wildcats.

The point of all this is to make the public aware that HCM can affect more than just athletes. Many people experience the effects listed above and pass them off as stress-induced — or worse — some ignore them completely.

There is a way to combat HCM, and it starts right here at K-State.

Bates' mother, Sharon, has Golf team struggles with consistency at New Mexico tournament

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team is struggling with one aspect of its overall golf game — consistency. After carding a combined 325 on Oct. 5 in the final round of the Price's Give 'Em Five Challenge in Las Cruces, N.M., the Wildcats were bumped from a fifth to a ninth-place finish.

According to Coach Kristi Knight, it was a frustrating finish for the team.

"For us to be successful, we've got to be better on our bad days," Knight said. "When things aren't going well for you, you're tested — that's when you're really playing golf."

Knight said she believes a major part of her players' problems can be attributed to their personal mental battles on the course. In such an individual game, it becomes easy to blame yourself, she said.

"All golfers will play bad golf," Knight said. "When you feel like you are the only one struggling, that leads to more bad shots."

In golf, not only can a player's mentality affect their game, but weather conditions are a variable to be considered in competition, Knight said.

"The girls need to understand that you've got to play the course the way you find it. It's going to change from day-to-day, and you've got to play with what it gives you that day," Knight said.

On Tuesday, Knight said, there were some cross-winds on several holes increasing the level of difficulty, essentially making a couple par-4's play more like par-5's.

"When the course gets tougher, the key is to not lose perspective," Knight said.

Despite the individual nature of golf, Knight said she still values the win as a team, lose as a team attitude. As a result, she said, while the players are striving to improve, she is also trying to become a better coach.

"We succeed and sail as a team. There are things I need to do better," Knight said.

"It is my responsibility to hammer into their heads that the course does change, and they can't try and play the same round of golf they played the round before."

Regardless of the Wildcats' battle for consistency in their game, Knight said one thing remaining consistent is her confidence in her players.

"I haven't lost my confidence in the girls — they just need to make some better decisions," Knight said.

Furthermore, Knight said she

NBA | Bryant accused must be identified, judge says

A federal judge on Wednesday rejected a request from the woman accusing Kobe Bryant of rape to remain anonymous in her civil lawsuit against the NBA star, saying the public's interest in open court proceedings outweighs her desire to shield her identity.

Bryant

"The parties appear as equals before the court and that fundamental principle must be protected throughout these proceedings," U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch said.

He said allowing the woman to remain anonymous could be misconstrued as a prejudgment in her favor.

Attorneys for the 20-year-old woman had asked Matsch to protect her identity, saying she has been the subject of death threats and sordid publicity for more than a year. At least two men have been prosecuted for allegedly threatening to kill the woman, or saying they would kill her for money.

Attorneys for Bryant opposed the anonymity request earlier this week, saying she shouldn't be able to bring a "false accusation" in her lawsuit without being identified.

No trial date has been set in the civil lawsuit.

NFL | Thomas says Williams' return to team unlikely

With running back Ricky Williams ready to reverse directions and come out of retirement, his former Miami Dolphins teammates were mixed in their reaction Wednesday.

Williams

"He will not be playing for the Dolphins," Zach Thomas predicted. "He's got too many things with the fans and too much with the media, and that's the reason he ran from it in the first place. He wouldn't come back here."

Thomas might be right. Gary Ostrow, an attorney who has represented Williams, said the 2002 NFL rushing champion hopes to receive clearance from the league to play again before the Oct. 19 trade deadline so he can be dealt by Miami.

Williams asked the NFL for a hearing to clarify his status following repeated violations of the league drug program. The Dolphins say their understanding is he must serve a suspension for the rest of this season, and the NFL has declined to comment.

Contributing to Williams' change of heart about playing was an arbitration ruling Sept. 24 that he must repay more than $8.6 million to the Dolphins for breaching his contract. There's also the $3.5 million salary he has done without while traveling the world.

MGLF | Woods marries Swedish fiancée

A rainbow arching over their yacht greeted newlyweds Tiger Woods and Swedish bride Elin Nordegren on Wednesday, a day after the couple married in a lavish sunset ceremony that reportedly cost $1.5 million.

Woods

The couple came ashore after apparently spending their wedding night aboard the vessel. They stayed largely out of public view following the ceremony, which was held in a white-netted pagoda decorated with red roses.

As the couple came ashore, the California-born golfer was in swimming trunks and carrying a wet suit. The two were accompanied by the bride's identical twin, Josefin. Both women wore shorts and tank tops.

The Barbados Daily Nation quoted unidentified sources as saying the event cost $1.5 million. Woods reportedly imported 500 red roses for the ceremony.

Talk show host Oprah Winfrey and former NBA stars Michael Jordan and Charles Barkley were among more than 120 guests seen by an Associated Press reporter overlooking the clubhouse of the Sandy Lane resort and golf course, which went to extraordinary lengths to shield the ceremony from journalists.

Nordegren, 24, met Woods three years ago while she was the nanny to the children of Swedish golfer Jesper Parnevik.

LA TRAVIATA

McCain, Russian company present famous Verdi opera

"...true love should triumph over all...the highest virtue is a good heart."

Jean Sloop
PROFESSOR OF MUSIC

By Alison Filla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Great outfits, great music, good stories: opera can be a lot of fun.

Translated, "La Traviata" means "fallen woman," which is very appropriate for the story line.

The opera, written by Giuseppe Verdi, tells the story of Violetta, a courtesan who falls in love with a young man named Alfredo. However, Alfredo's father doesn't want him to have anything to do with her as it would reflect poorly on the family. Violetta has tuberculosis, and becomes very ill.

Conflict ensues.

La Traviata will be presented at McCain Auditorium by the Stanislavsky Opera Company. Founded in 1918, the Russian company has toured all over Europe with excellent reviews.

Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium, said he is very impressed by the company.

"They teach the singers how to act," Martin said. "They have good production values. The costumes are rich, the furniture is made of nice material, the walls look real. You'll believe you're there, on the set, at the party. It is easy to suspend your disbelief."

Martin points out the opera is sung in Italian, but there will be a translation on stage so viewers can understand what is going on. There will also be a full orchestra. Martin said the audience will walk away humming the songs.

Martin said the opera was brought to K-State for students to expand their horizons.

"It has a magic quality. Students can go and enjoy themselves. They won't have to labor over it or figure it out. It will give students who have never had the chance to see opera before to go. It is an addition to their education here that they may not have known existed," Martin said.

Jean Sloop, professor of music, is giving the Behind the Curtain talk before the show at 6:30 p.m. in 204 McCain. She will be talking about the history of "La Traviata" and its creation. She said in order to understand the story, it's important to keep the time period in mind.

"La Traviata" is set in 19th century France. Sexual hypocrisy was widespread. Men were expected to keep mistresses and not fall in love," Sloop said.

She said the main point of the play goes beyond the plot.

"The main idea of the opera is that true love should triumph over all and that the highest virtue is a good heart," Sloop said.

Stern to join Sirius satellite radio

Top-ranked shock jock Howard Stern said Wednesday that he will abandon his syndicated morning radio show to join Sirius satellite radio in 15 months, freeing him from government regulators and allowing him to "bring my fans, my show, my way."

Stern

"I've decided what my future is," Stern told his millions of listeners in announcing his five-year, multimillion-dollar contract. "It's not this kind of radio any more."

Stern, who battled for years with the FCC and conservative critics over his salacious show's content, will move to the national distributor of commercial-free music and sport programming when his contract with Infinity Broadcasting expires in 15 months. The deal will allow him to reach every market in the country.

Rapper Ja Rule to stand trial for assault

New Jersey rapper Ja Rule will return to Toronto next spring to face a charge of assault causing bodily harm, a Canadian court ruled at a pretrial hearing Wednesday.

A trial for the 28-year-old star, whose name is Jeffrey Atkins, was tentatively set for March 7 to 11 in Ontario Court. The performer did not attend.

His lawyers have said the rapper will plead not guilty to the charge.

Hefner builds home away from home in Vegas

Hugh Hefner is coming to Las Vegas, where he'll have a vertical version of his Playboy mansion — a nearly 12,000-square-foot love shack on top of the Palms hotel-casino's 40-story tower that's under construction.

The two-story suite will be named the Hugh Hefner Sky Villa. It will have its own glass elevator that overlooks the Strip along with indoor and outdoor pools.

The deal will allow the Palms to use the iconic brand in Nevada and in the tower's new nightclub, boutique casino and lounge, along with a retail Playboy store, said Bill Farley, Playboy's vice president of marketing events.

The 300-room tower opens in early 2006.

Art craftsman group brings conference to Manhattan

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The world of art will be combining with the university this weekend.

A conference for the Kansas Artist Craftsman Association will be held Oct. 8-9 at the Manhattan Arts Center.

"We really have two things going on. We are working with the art students as well. On Thursday, Gary Nosske will be coming to the jewelry and metalsmithing class," said Elliot Pujol, professor of art and organizer of the KACA event.

Pujol said Nosske will be making an alloy metal which is heated to a red-hot state and forged while it is hot. The end product will be either a tablespoon, a teaspoon, or a serving spoon.

"On Saturday, he (Nosske) will do a similar demonstration for the conference. There is also a guest potter, Doug Casebeer, that will come and do a ceramics demonstration in classes on Friday," Pujol said.

"We have a lot of guest artists that come to the university. It's interesting, a faculty member may look at a student's work and say one thing and visiting artists can look at the work and say the same thing, but the artists comments usually have a greater impact on students," Pujol said.

Casebeer will also be giving a demonstration at the conference.

Pujol said as part of the conference, Glen Brown, professor of art history, will give a talk about crafts in America. Jay Nelson, co-owner of the Strecker-Nelson Art Gallery, also will talk about artists getting their work into galleries.

"There will be the talks by Brown and Nelson and both the potter and the metalsmith worker will answer questions from the audience," Pujol said.

"Students who plan to pursue careers in the crafts will have obvious professional reasons for attending the conference, but other may find something of more general value," said Brown.

Art of cooking includes experiments

Everyone, at some point in their life, experiments with different things.

WILL KLUSENER

Be it athletics, music or trying on your mom's hosiery when she's not there (hey, I'm not here to judge), we all try out different things while trying to learn more about ourselves.

However, these experiments can sometimes go horribly wrong, as evidenced by the following story.

Yet this isn't meant to discourage, but to encourage you to keep trying when you cook. You'll get it right eventually.

I remember it vividly, an experience that shall forever remain etched in my memory.

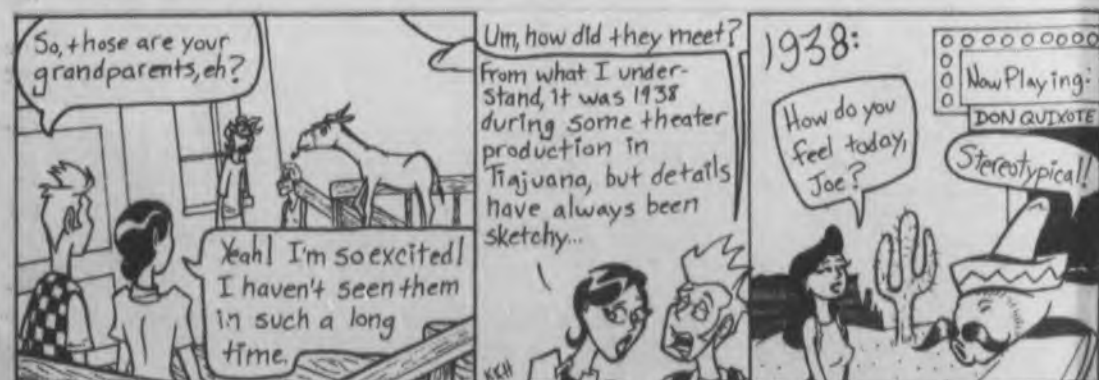

It was an uncharacteristically balmy June evening, and a good friend of mine, whose name shall remain anonymous (let's call her Jean), had just phoned me with an invitation for dinner with her and her boyfriend, Steve.

Figuring that our meal would be one of two dishes she can actually make without having to call a hazardous materials clean-up team, and having nothing else to do, I graciously accepted.

I hopped on my bike and double-timed it over to her apartment with my mouth salivating, like Pavlov's dog, at the thought of spaghetti with

Fritz said Guerre again provided a calming influence for K-State when the Wildcats needed it most. "She has a very consistent, composed demeanor about her Guerre said her job of setting is made easier by having players like Hejjas and Martin.

"It's great having both of them," Guerre said. "They're both very good hitters. They know when it's time to put the ball down, they put the ball down."

For Hejjas, who is from Hungary, the significance of the match with the Jayhawks was lost on her last year, but now she understands the Sunflower Showdown.

"I enjoyed this match a lot more than a year ago, because then I didn't know anything about this rivalry between KU and K-State," she said. "This year I was fired up coming here and wanted to shut them up."

The Wildcats will take the momentum of their fifth straight conference win into Saturday's match with Texas at Ahearn Field House.

GOLF | Team hopes to up morale still believes every tournament is a learning experience. The key to success, according to Knight, is to recognize the positives.

"Every girl had a positive she can take away from this tournament," Knight said.

A definite positive emerging from this year's team is sophomore Helene Robert. In a team that has struggled with success this season, Robert has been a source of stability for the team, Knight said.

"We're really proud of Helene - she's done a great job this season," Knight said. "She's really stepped up, and it's time for the other girls to step up."

Robert, who has led the Wildcats individually in all three tournaments this season - including the Challenge with a 23rd-place finish - is more humble about her success.

"We're all great players, and everyone is good on any given day," Robert said. "I'm just lucky to be having a good season and able to help out."

With only two tournaments remaining this fall, Robert said the team is looking for two solid showings to send them into the spring feeling confident.

Knight agrees a strong finish for the team would undoubtedly boost morale.

"I don't think we're a good team right now," Knight said. "But I know we can be because we have definitely got the ability."

spear-headed an effort to raise awareness about HCM. She formed the Anthony Bates Foundation in order to get people tested early enough so death can be avoided.

This Sunday, the Anthony Bates Foundation will give free echocardiograms to people between the ages of 14 and 40 at the K-State Alumni Center.

Yes, that's right, I said free. Free as in you don't have to pay.

The first 300 people who show up between 1 and 4 p.m. will get an echocardiogram test performed on them at no cost. The test is painless and will be done under the supervision of a cardiologist.

What do you have to lose? Go do something good for yourself and get tested this Sunday. I know it will be in the middle of fall break, but this is your life we're talking about. It is a precious thing.

Don't fall into the trap of believing nothing is wrong just because you don't feel anything. This is an opportunity to help yourself and help raise awareness about a horrible disease.

Get tested, possibly save your life, and don't spend a cent. Not a bad deal.

CANADA | Coach relishes the opportunity to practice in fall

chemistry prior to the official 2004-05 season.

"It's such a luxury to be able to practice with the team this time of year," Wooldridge said.

The development of Peete, Allen and Stewart - and highly-touted sophomore s-wingman Cartier Martin - will no doubt be critical to the success of K-State this upcoming season, as the Wildcats try to build off of the 14-14 record a year ago. Along with the loss of Willingham, K-State will be without departed senior guards Jarrett Hart, Tim Ellis and Frank Richards.

Almost immediately following Willingham's decision to leave, Wooldridge said the 6-foot-4 Stewart would likely fill in as starting point guard.

Stewart said he relishes the chance to show people what he can do.

"I'm really excited to get that opportunity," Stewart said. "The way the coaches, the team and my family have supported me really makes it a lot easier on myself."

Peete, a 6-foot-4 transfer from Northeast Oklahoma A&M, could also see starting time, having played both the point guard and shooting guard positions in high school and at Northeast Oklahoma.

Peete said Wooldridge has shown faith in the new guards from the get-go.

"He's very confident in us, taking a chance to put two newcomers in there at the guard positions and putting the ball in our hands," Peete said.

Somewhat lost in the off-season hype has been the development of K-State's post players. The Wildcats return sophomore Tyler Hughes, junior Marques Hayden and seniors Justin Williams, Travis Canby and Dramane Diarra down low.

Oh yeah, and the Big 12 Newcomer of the Year.

Jeremiah Massey is back for his senior campaign after leading the team in scoring at 14.7 points per game and re-

"Coach says we're the best group of guys he's had as far as wanting to win."

Jeremiah Massey

bounding at 7.8 per game last season as a junior transfer.

"He had an outstanding year, especially for a new player at this level," Wooldridge said. "The numbers this year might not be dramatically up, because they're already so high."

With the newcomers and Massey grabbing preseason attention, the 6-foot-11 Hughes is raising eyebrows among the team.

"He's gained 25 pounds," Massey said. "He's doing great things. We didn't expect him to be as good as he is until his junior year, but he's playing good now."

As the Wildcats get ready to battle opponents north of the border, Wooldridge and players agree the team has a fire heading into the weekend and the season.

"Coach says we're the best group of guys he's had as far as wanting to win," Massey said.

Wooldridge said the team began to show that desire almost as soon as last season ended.

"I could go back further than practice," Wooldridge said. "Every player in our program was on campus this summer. Players' commitment and work ethic dating back to the spring has been outstanding."

This weekend the Wildcats play Simon Fraser Saturday, Langara College and the University of British Columbia on Sunday and Trinity Western on Monday.

But Wooldridge said the tour is all about the Wildcats.

"We'll just emphasize what we're doing and hope the opposing teams offer a challenge," he said.

Manhattan feels effect of vaccine shortage

National supply of flu vaccine cut in half

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The national supply of flu vaccines was cut in half Tuesday.

Roughly 46 million doses of the vaccine were cut off by a major supplier in Britain.

National health officials found the British vaccines to be faulty, said Jay Reppert, Lafene Health Center medical director.

"Some of the vaccines were ineffective in preventing vaccination spread, and their government just decided to close down the business for a few months."

These few months could mean a lot to national dosages of vaccinations, Carol Kennedy, director of Lafene health promotion, said.

"The city of Manhattan is beginning to feel the problem," Reppert said. "As of now, I do not think anybody has vaccinations left in town."

Kennedy said those who do not have vaccinations should not worry.

"Lafene has had vaccine shortages in the past, and we usually are able to

Senate approves privilege fee increase

KSDB will get 19 cents more per student

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After four weeks of debate in the Student Senate, two bills proposing a student privilege fee increase of 19 cents per semester were passed.

The increase will be evident in the funds allocated to KSDB radio station.

The areas effected by the added funds are news, sports and promotions for the radio station as well as increases in salaries and student pay. The second bill was for repairs and replacements.

KSDB had been receiving $1.36 per semester, but the new amount will be $1.53, Allocations Chair Michael Burns said.

"The radio station asked that $112,000 be allocated. This was a $62,000 increase from last year," Burns said.

A resolution was introduced to televise Student Senate meetings over a Rooms can be scanned for spy cameras

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A camera the size of a dime can be easily hidden and could bring truth to the saying from George Orwell's "1984" — "Big brother is watching you."

In this day and age, anyone could be big brother.

According to the Web site www.spysupplystore.com, the "world's smallest 'truly wireless' color spy camera," which is the size of a dime, has a retail price of $399.

The C-50-MW spy camera is not the only, nor the cheapest option on the Web site. There is a camera with wires that is a one-half inch square, selling for $49.

Radio Shack Manhattan sells security cameras disguised as other objects, such as clocks or fire detectors, owner Frank Beer said. But people also can buy a tiny camera and hide it behind whatever they want.

With this accessibility on the Internet and at local stores, anyone can buy tiny or spy cameras.

Beer said he thinks most people who want to buy spy cameras revert to the Internet, and Radio Shack sells to people mainly for security reasons. He said there are two reasons people want to buy security cameras.

"One is to keep somebody from doing something, or two is to catch somebody doing something," Beer said. "We probably sell to more of the former than latter."

Most of the security cameras hook up to a VCR but Internet cameras are becoming more popular Beer said. Internet cameras allow one to view what the camera is recording from any location via the Internet.

The cameras at Radio Shack — like the ones on the Internet — range in price.

"Security cameras start at about $60," Beer said. "The smaller ones are going to be $100 or more."

If people are worried about having hidden cameras in their homes or businesses, there is a new business in town, called SafeScan, which detects hidden cameras.

SafeScan, which opened for business about two months ago, can go into a home or business and use equipment that detects hidden cameras, said Dave Carlson, creator and scan tech with SafeScan.

Carlson said depending on the size of the place, the length of time varies for different scans. He said a residence hall room might take under an hour to complete, whereas a business might take several days because of electrical interference.

The cost to have a resident's room scanned is about $20, he said.

"Then we move up from there," Carlson said. "It's a peace of mind for people."

Carlson said they haven't yet found any hidden cameras in a scan.

"We have not found any hidden cameras in anybody's personal apartment," he said. "Nothing new and exciting yet."

Carlson said their business is not limited to the Manhattan area.

"I'll go anywhere if it's equitable for us," he said.

Because tiny cameras are easily attainable, Carlson said there is a need for businesses such as his.

"You keep reading more about people finding them in their home," he said.

He said he lives in the Manhattan area, and that is why he started the company.

What could be more heart-warming during the increasingly chilly autumn days than a supped-up action/comedy flick starring Queen Latifah ("Chicago") and "Saturday Night Live" alum Jimmy Fallon? Well, once you add a group of supermodel bank robbers to the mix (including Brazilian beauty Gisele Bündchen's silver screen debut), you've certainly got something.

"Taxi," directed by Tim Story ("Barbershop"), is rated PG-13 and opens today in theaters nationwide.

Ford Hall residents enjoy suites' privacy

By Annie M. Lewis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When students moved into Ford Hall this semester, they got a suite surprise.

The rooms in the women's residence hall were converted to suites, said Bob Burgess, associate director of administrative services for K-State Housing and Dining Services. He said Ford now houses fewer students, but the demand for suites justified the renovations.

The project, which cost $3.7 million, took about a year to complete, said Burgess.

"The demand for suites continued to rise through the years," he said. "So it was sufficient timing to renovate an entire building."

Ford houses 448 people, and two rooms share a bathroom, Burgess said. Before the suites were built, 614 students lived in the single and double occupancy rooms.

Director of Housing and Dining Services Chuck Werring said they are continually looking for ways to better serve the students.

"Students want more privacy," he said. "They don't necessarily like the gang bathrooms."

Beth Moore, freshman in athletic training, said she was happy when she learned of the new suites.

"I wanted to live in Ford, because I heard it was going to be a lot nicer," she said. "I was excited when I got in."

Privacy is a big bonus, she said.

"I like having my own bathroom," she said. "You can have a lot more space to walk around, and store your things."

Students have to clean their own bathrooms, which was not that big of a deal for her, Moore said.

"It's not that bad of a responsibility," she said. "Most people do it at home anyway."

The changes in the residence halls are part of a much larger project, Werring said.

Werring said he is looking forward to the $100 million plan to replace about half of the apartments in the Jardine Terrace and renovate the rest.

Werring also said he hopes to establish on-campus apartments and townhouses, quality on-site parking, and more, within the next 10 years.

"We want to make a menu of opportunities for students who want to live on campus," he said. "We will do that by giving them options beside dorms."

Suites come in many shapes and sizes, Werring said. There are a lot of factors that weigh into their decision on what type of suite to build.

"We look at the architecture of the building," he said. "Then we try to use the maximum amount of square footage we can."

The next residency to experience changes will be Haymaker Hall, Werring said.

In January 2005, half of Haymaker will be changed into suites and ready for students by the fall. Other changes will include updating other rooms and replacing furniture, Werring said.

TO THE POINT

Nineteen cents for 91.9 good investment

Two whole dimes.

That's how much it will cost each student each semester in additional privilege fees to fund the budget increases for KSDB-FM 91.9.

The radio station will receive increases that will allow it to compete in national competitions at a lower cost to the participating students, travel to cover road sporting events, keep up to date with the latest technology in both studios, and offer students better access to local, state and national news with a new Associated Press wire service.

Such improvements will undoubtedly allow the radio station to improve on its services to students and is obviously worth the extra 19 cents students would have to cough up each semester.

After objectively reviewing the request, the Privilege Fee Committee acted in a way that best represents the needs of the collective student body.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR: 24/7 parking proposal appears inappropriate, burdensome

Editor,

I am writing to urge strong opposition to the enforcement of "permit only" parking on campus, 24/7.

Is there any issue on campus more aggravating, more infuriating or more frustrating than on-campus parking? In the wake of double-digit tuition increases, a struggling economy and additional efforts to raise funds for basic needs, to even suggest this new parking policy seems like a cruel joke.

Explain to my wife or my female students, who are trying to save money and park off-campus, why they would have to park off-site and walk in the dark to the library, or to a computer lab, or to any other on-campus facility.

I believe, and hope most other faculty members of students would agree, that K-State is a great university, and that it can be even better. I also believe we are willing, as we are able, to bear some financial burden to make KSU as great as it can be.

However, the suggestion of this policy makes me feel I am not being used to improve this great institution of ours, but that I'm just getting screwed.

I urge faculty and students alike to demand that, if this new policy is to be talked about seriously, we be given solid and overwhelming evidence as to its merit.

Splitting the vote

Columnists take sides as the State of Colorado mulls over proposal to split its electoral votes proportionately

ABBY HILES

With a major election coming up, it is hard to focus on any other issues on the table besides the presidential race.

"Who will win?" you ask yourself: Republicans or Democrats, Bush or Kerry, Bud or Bud Light, etc.

However, there are other issues on ballots across the nation that deserve attention.

For instance, Colorado will be voting to decide whether to keep their electoral votes as a "winner-take-all" system or to award them proportionally, as Nebraska and Maine do.

This tends to be a controversial issue in the Rocky Mountain state, because the presidential race is tight and if the law were passed, it would take effect immediately and proportionally distribute its electoral votes to the deserving candidates.

And with all those electoral votes, I'm sure that Colorado's position as a major swing state would make a difference.

Wait a minute ... Did I say all those electoral votes? I mis-spoke, and I apologize.

If you head on over to the National Archives Web site they give you an overview of how many electoral votes each state is allotted. Kansas still is hanging in there with a whopping six, and Colorado is not much farther above with a mind-boggling nine.

That's right. Nine votes. It's not as if California is passing this law and the Electoral College would split up 55 votes. That might make a difference.

Or even in the electionally challenged Florida. Now that is a state that can swing an election one way or the other. Proportionally distributed votes would definitely have helped out Florida four years ago in the midst of its "pregnant chad" fiasco.

No, we are talking about Colorado — the home of Aspen snow bunnies, John Denver's "Rocky Mountain High," and Coors beer. It's a place where candidates conveniently skip over on the campaign trail because there are only nine electoral votes at stake.

There isn't any major campaigning in Colorado. Candidates try for the big states, the ones that matter — the ones that have at least 15 electoral votes. They're not campaigning in a Midwestern state that could, if the votes were distributed proportionally, maybe give them three votes.

If the candidates were looking for only three votes, why not send them up to North Dakota? I'm pretty sure all 634,000 people in North Dakota would turn out if Bush or Kerry made a campaign stop in Bismarck.

They are probably pretty devoid of entertainment up there sometimes.

It's not as if I don't see the value of proportionally distributing the electoral votes.

After all, the Electoral College was set up in the 18th century, when half the population couldn't read the ballot, so having a few educated trustees do the final voting made sense.

But maybe Colorado and states across the United States shouldn't be looking to change the Electoral College, but rather to knock it out all together.

Is it really even necessary anymore when our country is boasting a 97-percent literacy rate? And with the complete mockery we made out of our last election, in which Bush lost the popular vote but won the White House, shouldn't a new system be instituted altogether?

Perhaps Colorado is on their way to this ultimate goal, and I'm just not seeing it.

I will be watching, if only to see how the major networks handle the coloring of the state on election night.

In a sea of Midwest Republican red, the nation will finally spot Colorado as it is split in two.

LETA REPERT

The year is 2048. The country is once more in the midst of a tight presidential race.

On a Tuesday early in November, votes are cast all over the nation, either for Jenna Bush or Vanessa Kerry. As the votes are tallied on election night, voting irregularities are reported in two districts in... Kansas.

The candidates both have 268 electoral votes, so the election will be determined by the results in those districts.

This may sound a bit far-fetched (or even impossible, by today's distribution of electoral votes,) but it actually could happen.

Colorado has placed an initiative on its ballot which would redistribute its electoral votes proportionally rather than giving them all to the overall winner of the state.

If the measure is successful, states all over the country might decide to follow its example.

Colorado is currently a swing state, giving the overall winner or loser all of its electoral votes, even though the election will most likely be within a few percentage points there.

The initiative to reapportion its electoral votes would take effect immediately if passed, leaving both the victor and the loser with a portion of the votes. It also could be challenged in court, which leads USA Today to claim that Colorado of 2004 could be the Florida of 2000.

But my question is: Why should they have all the fun?

The reason nothing like this will happen in Kansas any time soon is everyone knows Kansas will vote Republican, giving all of its electoral votes to the Republican candidate.

It's the same in strongly Democratic states too, since it is assumed that their votes will all go to the Democratic candidate.

This means that those of us who live in uncontested states are ignored.

Only those who live in states "made up of people who apparently have a hard time making up their minds" get any attention, as Chicago Tribune columnist Clarence Page put it.

The Seattle Times reports that the group opposed to the Colorado initiative, which calls itself Coloradans Against a Really Stupid Idea, objects to this measure because it would effectively make Colorado no longer a swing state.

Instead of the winner or loser getting all of Colorado's nine electoral votes, they probably would get only one more than their opponent, which wouldn't be a good incentive to spend time campaigning there.

Alan Natapoff, a physicist with an interest in the Electoral College, thinks that Colorado's plan is a bad idea, since "the Electoral College frequently affords individual citizens more power than they have under direct popular voting," as Business Week reports.

That is exactly my point. The current system gives voters in states like Colorado a much bigger role in elections than those of us in places like Kansas, taking away much of the power of our votes.

If some people's votes are more important, others become less important.

So why don't we just get rid of the Electoral College?

One of the main reasons is that it keeps local voting problems local.

If we switched to direct democracy, meaning the Electoral College would be eliminated and the total vote count in the nation would determine the victor, we might have to recount the votes at polling places all over the country in a tight race, rather than just in a few, as in the case of the 2000 election.

By allotting Electoral College votes proportionally state by state, states like Colorado would be less important for elections than they are now, but states like Kansas would be less unimportant.

Bush for 2048!

First all-CGI feature film marks technological advances

"Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow"

Movie review by Corbin H. Crable

At first glance, "Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow" doesn't seem to be anything special.

It didn't break any sales records during its opening weekend. The plot is simple and doesn't require much thought. It opened at the beginning of the fall season, which is one of the slowest moviegoing periods of the year.

But to watch the film is to experience pioneering filmmaking. First-time director Kerry Conran weaves together stunning visual effects, amazing cinematography and top-notch acting in Jude Law, Angelina Jolie and Gwyneth Paltrow to produce a story that should live on in the annals of film history.

The movie centers around the mysterious disappearance of several scientists. Headstrong journalist Polly Perkins (Paltrow) is sent to investigate the missing persons and — with the help of a flyboy pilot/ex-flame (Law) and an ambitious air force captain (Jolie) — uncovers a conspiracy that will completely change the world.

All this (and city-destroying robots, too) cast against the backdrop of a futuristic society that Hollywood imagined during the golden era of film, but never came to be.

"Sky Captain" stands as the first movie in history to be filmed entirely in CGI; so if you're the type of person who enjoys staying during the closing credits to see where the movie was filmed, you might be sorely disappointed. In fact, it might be hard to find an original prop in the entire movie.

And I'm of the opinion that this movie is pure genius.

The irony of the excessive use of CGI is that the film pays homage to the film noir of the 1930s and 40s, as well as the campy science fiction films that dominated the 1950s.

Everything in the movie, from the skyscrapers of the city of Gotham (which look hauntingly like those in German filmmaker Fritz Lang's 1927 sci-fi hit "Metropolis") right down to the robots that invade said city, is sleek and reminiscent of World War II-era architecture and style.

Creating these entities using computer graphics pays tribute to their place in movie history and heralds a movement from noir to technology.

In a way, "Sky Captain" is the proverbial bridge that provides the transition between the old and the new: the movie's tribute to film noir is an appropriate way to recognize the genre's place in cinematic history while heralding a new era of technology use in films.

Take a chance, see the movie, look past the plot and see "Sky Captain" for what it is: a pioneering work that shows us just how far Hollywood has come since its inception. You'll be delighted at what you discover.

KC author to speak at Manhattan Hastings

Starving artists take heart. Paul Dorrell, Kansas City novelist and art gallery owner, wrote "Living the Artist's: A Guide to Growing, Persevering, and Succeeding in the Art World."

Dorrell will discuss how he's advanced the careers of artists he's worked with, as well as his own as a writer, 7 p.m., Saturday at Hastings.

Sharing examples from his own life as well as the lives of such artists as Vincent Van Gogh, Auguste Rodin and Jackson Pollock, Dorrell gives tips on how to further an artist's career. As stated on page 1, Dorrell wrote his book to "give you the opportunity to learn what we have; to guide you as you develop your career; to reassure you when it seems your career is in flames or, worse, when you feel you don't even have any freaking career."

The book isn't just for artists, either.

"I've also written it for the student and the teacher, the writer and the reader, the gallery owner and the collector, and anyone else who lives within the world of creative drive," Dorrell wrote.

Project Comfort concert to support returning soldiers

By Christin E. Kuchem
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Live acoustic performances, free food and an outdoor atmosphere are part of tonight's Project Comfort concert.

Project Comfort is a benefit event to support and welcome home Fort Riley troops.

Three songwriters will share the stage with live, country acoustic sets. Sean Locke, a Nashville recording artist, will headline the event.

He will be joined by two acclaimed area musicians: Robert Hildreth and Pete Gile.

Originally from Iowa, Kan., Locke moved to Nashville to pursue a career as a professional musician. He has since made a name for himself as a songwriter with the hit, "Barbed Wire and Roses," a song made successful in the charts by the country group, PinMonkey.

His songs also have been performed by Gary Allen, Keiran Kane and Bruce Robison.

Locke will be performing his latest single, "Don't Look Away," from an upcoming debut album.

"He's definitely proven he can write a hit," said Hildreth.

Hildreth, a local performer, said he will share a selection of original songs written specifically for and about the troops honored by Project Comfort.

The songs are licensed to Project Comfort, and the CD will be made available to the public at the event for $10. The soldiers will receive free copies as a small gift.

"The flavor of the CD is to try to capture what servicemen and women feel about this war," Hildreth said. "There are some tearjerkers that will hit close home and some that hit you elsewhere. It covers a broad range of emotion."

The founder and director of Project Comfort, Selina Bell, said Hildreth did a good job with the CD.

"He (Hildreth) wrote some great songs for the CD," Bell said. "One song, 'Daddy Will,' is about a soldier who hasn't seen his child yet. These songs are very touching."

Another performer at the event will be Pete Gile, a Manhattan area musician.

"My style is sort of a combination between alternative country and contemporary folk," said Gile.

Gile said he has worked with Hildreth in the past, performing at what Hildreth calls "The Lunch and Country Show," a lunch hour series of performances around restaurants in the Wamego area.

"Pete Gile is a great performer," Hildreth said.

"I've really enjoyed working with him around the Wamego area. There has been a lot of good response from those shows."

For Bell, Project Comfort is a labor of love. She said Project Comfort started a year ago, first as a charity to provide stuffed animals for soldiers to give to Iraqi children in war torn regions.

Another venture was a letter writing program to show appreciation to troops overseas.

"My husband was in Iraq for a year, so that's what started all of this," Bell said. "There have been times were I've almost given up on it, but I couldn't. I know that it's working. I'm very pleased with the way it's turned out."

Lines of decency concerning public affection are clearly drawn

Mention the letters PDA and my roommate Marla gives a slight shudder.

For her, the acronym for public display of affection instantly conjures up images of her high school locker, or rather, what was going on in front of her high school locker.

During every passing period Marla had to endure the sight of the couple with the locker next to hers showing their affection for each other. And this wasn't just a few kisses here and there. This was making out, hardcore.

We've all been there before. You're walking on campus, waiting for your table at a restaurant or shopping at the mall, when you spot a happy couple, all smiles and holding hands. The guy leans over and gives his girlfriend a kiss.

Now, I don't know what runs through guys' heads in this situation, but I know what goes through most girls' minds is, "Awww." It's cute to see two people who care about each other enough to show it off in public — until they take it further.

The kissing becomes deeper, maybe you even see some tongue. The hands are dangerously close to naughty areas. And all of this action is going on right there in public — in front of you, fellow students, parents, children and everyone lucky enough to be within sight.

It's this kind of scene that gives PDA a bad reputation. People complain about even the slightest hint of affection between couples, because they're afraid. If they don't complain, they might witness a scene like the one mentioned above.

There are some types of PDA acceptable everywhere and receive little negative reaction. There are those that aren't ever acceptable and should be restricted to the privacy of your own bedroom.

The problem is, different people have different levels of PDA that they feel is acceptable. What some see as innocent, others find disgusting and offensive.

Holding hands, hugging and light kissing is fine, as well as light kissing, cheeks or forehead.

These PDA tell the world that you're out with someone you care about.

Open-mouth kissing usually makes people start to squirm. They definitely start to if they see any kind of tongue.

Playing professional tonsil hockey just sends them over the edge.

Groping each other is not okay to do in public. Hands should be kept where everybody can see them and away from sexual nether regions. If you're feeling that hot and bothered, it's time to get a room.

Oral action and sex are two acts which should never be performed in public, unless you're in some parts of Europe. Most people don't want to see these things.

If you're all about showing off your love and affection for your significant other, feel free to do so. Just remember what's acceptable and don't overdo it. And always leave the clothes on.

Longhorns visit for Big 12 showdown

Volleyball team looks to get best of No. 11 Texas

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State meets Texas in a battle of two of the Big 12 Conference's top teams at 7 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

The No. 16 Wildcats (11-4, 5-1 Big 12) come in riding a five-match winning streak. They meet an equally hot No. 11 Texas squad that is undefeated at 14-0 and 6-0 in the Big 12.

The Longhorns feature All-American and Player of the Year candidate, outside hitter Mira Topic, who leads the Big 12 with 5.33 kills per game. Teaming up with Topic to form one of the country's best outside hitter tandems is Bethany Howden, who has a 4.19 kill per game average. Another leader for Texas is setter Michelle Moriarity, with 12.65 assists per game.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she is very impressed with the Longhorns' team.

"They are extremely physical and big," Fritz said. "A year ago they were big and physical and had some ball-control issues. I think this year they've solved those ball-control issues. So now they've just added another dimension to their team. Howden and Topic are two of the best players in our league. They're an excellent team."

After a tight 3-2 win at Kansas on Wednesday, the Wildcats will have to bring their best game again Saturday.

"Texas is a wonderful volleyball team, and we will have to play very, very well to play with them," Fritz said.

"I think it's a wonderful challenge for our team, it's a challenge we need and it will only help us prepare ourselves better for each and every match. This is what it's about — to play volleyball at a high level and get in a dogfight with Texas. It's going to be fun."

NFL | Lewis pleads guilty to lesser charge in drug case

Baltimore Ravens running back Jamal Lewis pleaded guilty Thursday to using a cell phone to try to set up a drug deal and will be sentenced to four months in prison, to be served after the regular season ends in January.

Lewis still could be suspended this season by the NFL, which said Thursday it would have no immediate decision on any punishment.

"I made a mistake four years ago, when I was 20 years old, that I am paying heavily for," Lewis said outside the courthouse after his plea. "It's a difficult time for me. My family and friends were hurt more."

Sentencing was set for Jan. 26. The Super Bowl is Feb. 6.

Lewis, 25, pleaded guilty to a crime he committed more than four years ago. Under the plea agreement, which includes an additional two months in a halfway house and 500 hours of community service, drug conspiracy and attempted cocaine possession charges will be dropped.

Lewis could have faced at least 10 years in prison if convicted of the conspiracy charge, but as a first-time offender he probably would have received a shorter sentence under federal guidelines. His trial had been scheduled to start Nov. 1.

NBA | Kidd, Nets relationship continues to be strained

Jason Kidd is refusing to attend night sessions during the New Jersey Nets' two-a-day practices at training camp, and he doesn't care if the team fines him for it.

"They want me to be here — they have every right — but my best thing is to try to get healthy, rehab and push forward. That's my stance," said Kidd, who had knee surgery over the summer and is at least three weeks away from practicing. "Me sitting here for three hours is not helping me rehab."

Kidd ended a long public silence and made his displeasure with the Nets clear this week after an offseason that included the cost-cutting trades of Kenyon Martin and Kerry Kittles. Kidd and Alonzo Mourning said the Nets have no chance of winning a championship.

Coach Lawrence Frank wouldn't discuss Kidd's skipping night sessions, even to clarify whether Kidd's absences were excused or unexcused. Team president Rod Thorn did not return a telephone call seeking comment.

Kidd said the team had not informed him or his agent that he would be fined.

Under the collective bargaining agreement, players can be penalized $2,500 for each of the first two practices they miss and $5,000 for each subsequent absence.

NASCAR | Profanity leads to 5-second broadcast delay

NBC is adding a 5-second delay to its NASCAR telecasts after Dale Earnhardt Jr. used a vulgarity during a post-race TV interview last weekend.

Earnhardt was docked 25 points in the Nextel Cup standings and fined $10,000 for his slip of the tongue in an NBC interview after his victory at Talladega Superspeedway, dropping him to second place with seven races left in the season. He will appeal the point penalty.

Federal regulators have cracked down on objectionable content on TV and radio since Janet Jackson's "wardrobe malfunction" during her halftime performance at the Super Bowl. CBS was fined a record $550,000 by the FCC for Jackson's breast-baring incident.

Maintaining stamina

Summer work prepares tennis players for season

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Emphasis on fitness during the summer is paying off, and senior tennis player Maria Rosenberg is ready for her second tournament of the week.

"I worked on fitness all summer, and one of the benefits of working so hard on the fitness aspect is a quicker recovery," Rosenberg said.

Rosenberg and Jessica Simosa competed in the Riviera/All-American Championship last weekend. Rosenberg advanced to the final round of the pre-qualifier, ending with a record of 3-1 on the weekend, while Simosa lost in her second match, finishing with a record of 1-1.

Coach Steve Bietau said the range of competitors the players face is broad, but he said both players did well.

"Maria got a couple of matches where she could make mistakes and still win before she got someone really tough. They both got to see good players — Maria just got to play more," Bietau said.

The Wildcats travel to the Hoosier Classic in Bloomington, Ind., this weekend and face competition from ITA-ranked teams including LSU, Indiana, Iowa and Missouri.

Rosenberg said she doesn't see endurance as an issue, but she said she wants to avoid making the mistakes she made at the Hoosier Classic last year.

"There was one match that I should have won, but I didn't, and I don't want to make that mistake again. I'd rather risk it playing well, then lose it playing badly," Rosenberg said.

Both players have been working to eliminate their personal mistakes in matches. They agreed it was important to be physically ready for the tournament, but they also said it was essential to be in the right mindset for competition, and that mindset starts in practice.

"I try to approach practice like a match because you have to be mentally the same in both. You have to focus and concentrate and figure out what needs to be done to win, you can't just do that in matches," Rosenberg said.

Freshman Olga Klimova said she has been trying to work on her mental game as the season progresses.

"I'm trying to concentrate, be more focused and get more confidence in my playing. I believe in myself in practice, but not as much in matches," Klimova said.

In addition to working to improve her mindset, Klimova said she is also emphasizing her strengths.

"I need to take advantage of my serve because its good and using it will help me to be better in matches," Klimova said.

Bietau said the Riviera was a good experience for Rosenberg and Simosa. Bietau said they both had moments when they played well, but they still have room for improvement.

"I want to see them continue to play and see if they can repeat what they did well the next time out with a different curriculum," Bietau said.

Equestrian team opens season with Western show at Fox Creek

By Zachary Payne
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday marks the beginning of the 2004 equestrian season with the K-State Western show at Fox Creek Stables.

Coach Teresa Slough said hosting a horse show provides a hefty workload.

"It takes organization and hard work to make sure everything is in order," Slough said.

Slough said about 18 extra horses were needed and brought in for the event.

The host school at horse events provides all the horses, and often times does not have enough on hand for a show.

The equestrian team was scheduled to compete in a previous Western show last month at Truman State; however, their entire barn of horses was diagnosed with an illness known as strangles.

Only Western riders will compete Saturday.

Slough said about 30 riders will be competing and some riders will be held out of competition due to what is best for the rider or the team.

Though the first-year coach has not seen the opposing competition before, she said she is confident.

"I do feel confident, I have not seen the other schools in our region, but our team has been riding well in practice," Slough said. "All riders in all levels have been improving across the board."

Junior Western rider Teal Ludwick said confidence abounds and hoped for a large fan turnout.

"I'm looking forward to the show and hope there is a large turnout," Ludwick said. "We have been working hard at practice and will be ready on Saturday."

Ludwick will be riding at the Intermediate level on Saturday as well as fellow Western rider, sophomore Kara Taddiken.

Taddiken praised the pleasant atmosphere and moral support shown by friends and family.

"The team chemistry has been great, because all the girls are putting a lot of energy into being unified and encouraging one another," Taddiken said. "The parents support has been awesome, we have a large following at every show and it's great to look in the stands and see them supporting us."

Women's soccer prepares for tourney

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Emily Beck, freshman in electrical engineering, attempts a goal while working through drills with the women's soccer club at Memorial Stadium. The team plays in the 26th Annual Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Tournament this weekend at Memorial Stadium.

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 26th Annual Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Tournament will take place at Memorial Stadium this weekend sponsored by the K-State women's soccer club.

Jennifer Porter, sophomore in kinesiology and president of the women's soccer club, said schools in and out of the Big 12 are playing in the tournament this weekend.

The club begins this weekend's play at 7:15 tonight against the University of Kansas.

According to the tournament Web site, the tournament is named in honor of Ed Chartrand, former K-State soccer club member who died a day after graduation in 1979. Chartrand was on the club team from 1974-78. The cause of death was never determined, and the family was asked if the club could name a tournament after Chartrand.

There will be 10 teams in the tournament, including two Colorado teams. Porter said all teams except one are club teams.

"Truman is the only school coming that doesn't have a club team," Porter said. "They're bringing their varsity team, but everybody else is bringing club teams."

Porter said she plays soccer because of the closeness of the team.

"I've been playing for 16 years now in total," Porter said. "I enjoy the camaraderie of the team."

Dave Darling, senior in sociology, coaches the women's team. He said there is more to the team than just coaching the players.

"I'm not just telling the players when and where to kick a ball, I'm also teaching them life lessons," Darling said.

"I've been coaching this team for four years now, but I've been playing for about 15 years. I don't just coach the team, but I organize fundraisers as well."

Sarah Darling, senior in apparel marketing, has been playing on the team for four years. She said she has seen some drastic changes in the soccer club since she started playing.

"When I first started playing my freshman year, it was just a bunch of girls just kicking around a soccer ball," Sarah Darling said. "When Dave took over, he really turned things around for this club."

Sarah Darling has been playing soccer for 16 years and said the game itself keeps her playing.

"I just love to play soccer," Darling said.

CAMERAS | Some feel safer after scans; police report no major problems

"I've always been kind of interested in electronics," Carlson said. "I worked around K-State. There's got to be some cameras up here."

Lt. Kurt Moldrup said there haven't been any reported incidents with spy cameras in Manhattan.

"I can't say that we have had a problem with it," he said.

He said there have been cases where a person will use a hidden camera to catch their roommate stealing from them, but such use isn't illegal.

There isn't a specific law addressing spy cameras, Moldrup said, but there could be other laws violated with them, such as criminal trespassing.

"They'd have to get there illegally," he said. "There's no law specifically, but there may be other laws that it violates."

Dee Probasco, Manhattan resident, said she employed SafeScan so she could rest assured.

"I saw the thing, and I kind of thought it'd be neat to have them scan my place," she said. "I just kind of wanted to see what they do."

"You just never know what you're going to run into."

Probasco said she lives in a house and has three children.

"I have children, so I wouldn't want someone to be watching them," she said.

It didn't take SafeScan much time to scan the house, she said.

"I would refer them to friends," Probasco said. "It doesn't take a lot of time, but you get what you paid for."

handle the demand of the University," Reppert said. "There are very few vaccines that college students need to worry about."

Students living in group settings should be more careful. "Those residing in large group living environments should be extra careful about the spread of viruses. If you live in a residence hall or greek living, you may want to double-check on how updated your shots are," Reppert said.

Updating a hepatitis B, chickenpox, or meningitis shot are also recommended, Kennedy said.

"This vaccination shortage will really take charge in the next few weeks," Reppert said. "I just hope the US vaccine suppliers can handle the demand."

cable network and be filmed by broadcast journalism students in the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications.

Ben Fenwick, College of Arts and Science Senator, said no budget increase would be required for the televised meetings to take place.

"They've already got the equipment, but we are still in the first stages at looking at capabilities," Fenwick said.

Fenwick said it is yet to be determined if the telecasts would be live, but test runs might begin as early as next semester.

"If we pass this, then hopefully the whole broadcast can be next fall," Fenwick said.

The resolution was referred back to its committee and will be reviewed and voted on at the next meeting.

Funds were allocated to The Navigators, Kappa Kappa Psi and the National Pan Hellenic Council.

During the next meeting, final action will be taken on bills allocating funds to Young Democrats and Proactive Educators for the Elimination of Rape and Sexual Assault.

Senators will not meet next Thursday because of fall break, but will reconvene Oct. 21.

YEARS and counting ...

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Governor's Cup has been tinted purple since 1993, with K-State winning the last 11 meetings in the annual Sunflower Showdown.

This year's game marks the 102nd time the Wildcats (2-2, 0-1) and Kansas Jayhawks (2-3, 0-2) have met, with the Jayhawks leading the all-time series 61-35-5. K-State's streak of 11 wins in a row over Kansas is the longest either school has held in the series.

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said the game and streak are important to him.

"For me personally, it's a little bit more of a rivalry, because I'm from Kansas," Berry, a Wichita native, said. "I think most of us from Kansas take it more serious than others, so we've got to keep that streak going."

Both teams come into Saturday's match-up looking for their first Big 12 Conference win, with the Wildcats dropping their first conference game against Texas A&M Oct. 2 and the Jayhawks losing their second-straight conference game to the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

Despite their two conference losses, the Jayhawks have lost both games by a combined seven points. Offensively, the Jayhawks have been led by sophomore quarterback Adam Barmann and sophomore running back John Randle.

Barmann ranks second in the Big 12 in passing yardage, averaging 225.4 yards through the air, with nine touchdowns. The 6-foot-4 quarterback also is fourth in the conference in total offense, averaging 236 yards per game.

Randle currently ranks sixth in the Big 12 in all-purpose yards, averaging 141 yards per game and leads the Jayhawks with 333 yards rushing. Against Nebraska, the 6-foot running back gained 105 yards on the ground

Fast facts

The Wildcats have dominated Kansas the last 11 years

K-State has outscored Kansas by a collective margin of 460-97 in the last 11 games. Last year, the Wildcats defeated the Jayhawks 42-6 and beat them 64-0 in their last meeting in Lawrence in 2002.

Heading into Saturday, matchup closer than years past

Led by the nation's No. 6 rusher in Darren Sproles (152.8 ypg), K-State ranks in the top 20 in the nation in rushing.

Kansas counters with its passing game led by returning quarterback Adam Barmann. The Jayhawks rank second in the Big 12 Conference in passing and are No. 31 nationally.

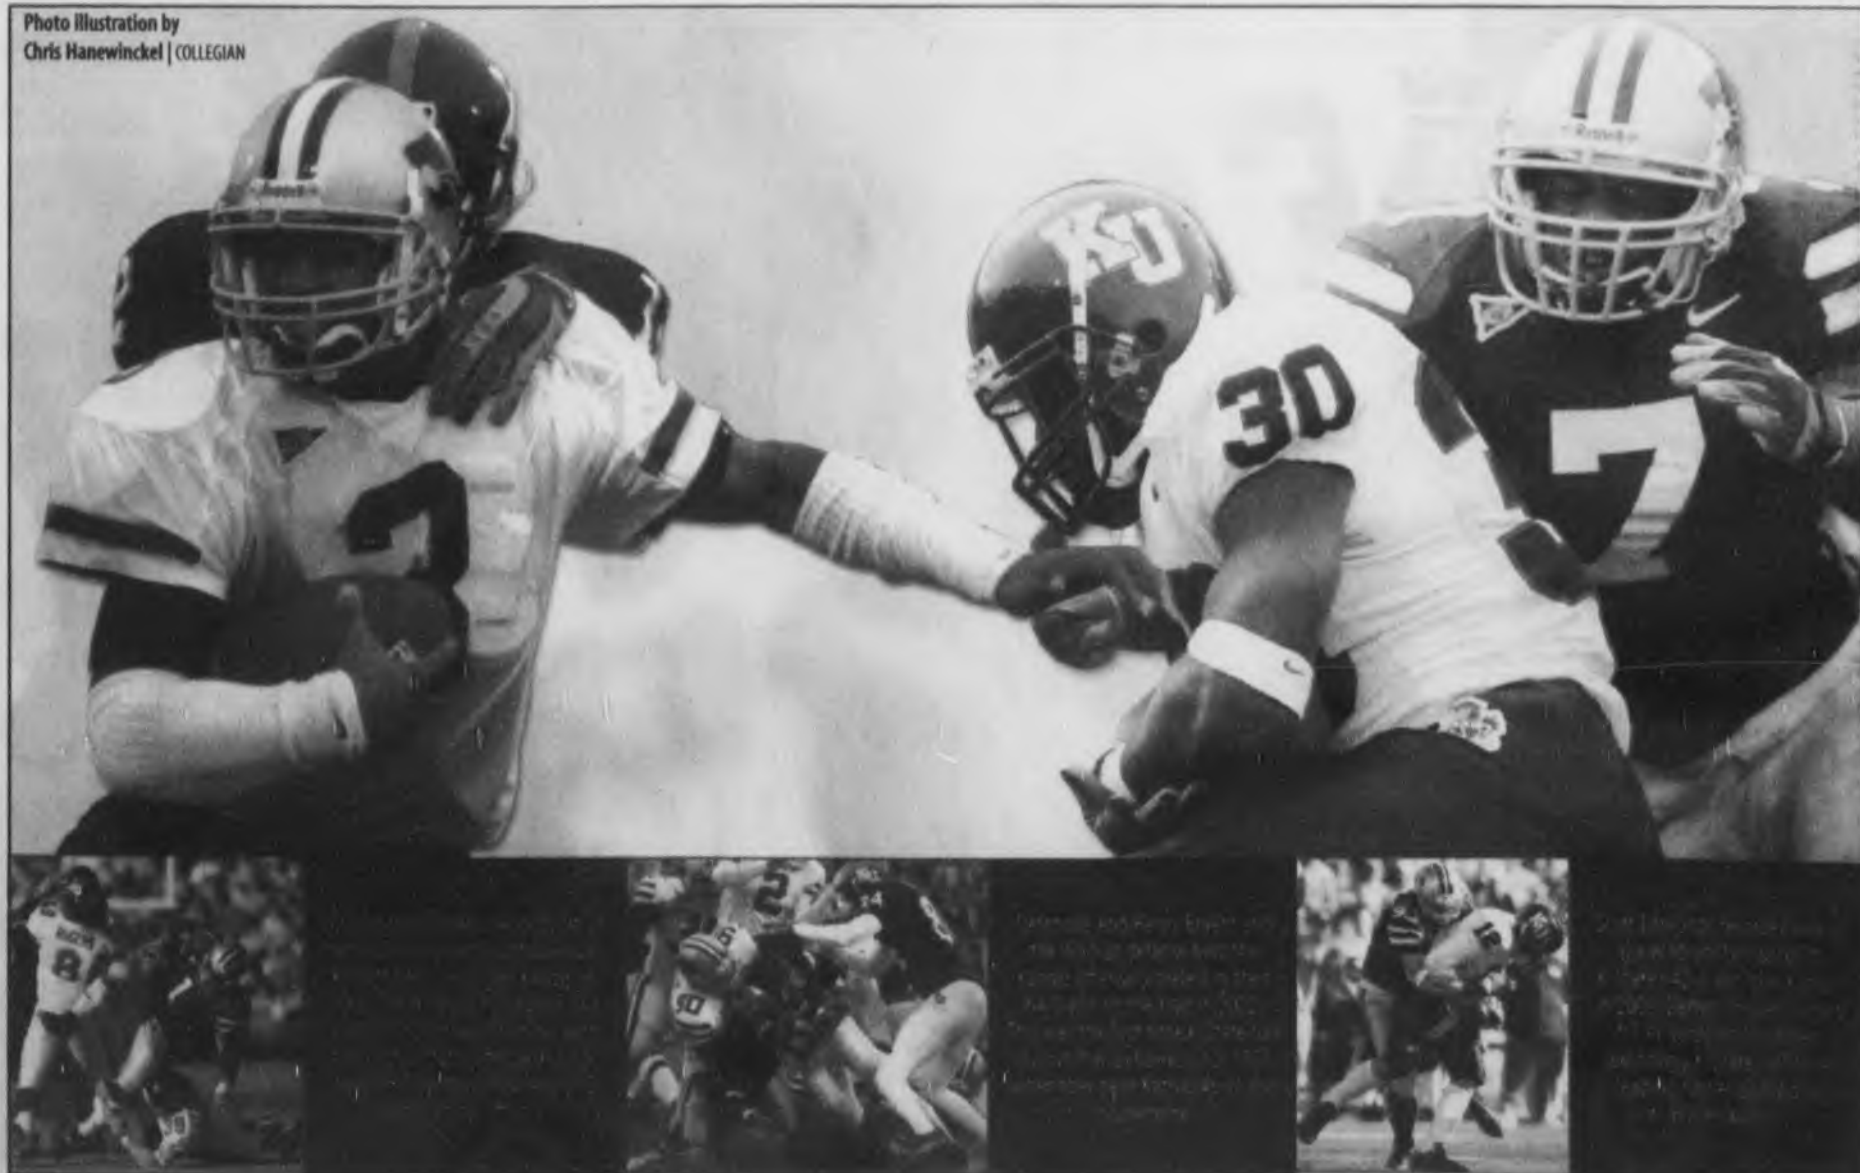

The Wildcats success falls upon running back Darren Sproles

When Darren Sproles is on, it is usually not a good sign for the Wildcats' opponents. In Sproles' 21 career 100-yard rushing games, K-State has won 18 times. When he is held under 100-yards on the ground, K-State is just 6-5 during his career. Last year against Kansas, Sproles rushed for 98-yards on 19 carries.

K-State favored by two points

Even though the Wildcats have dominated the past 11 years, the oddsmakers only have K-State as two-point favorites on Saturday.

If last week's loss to Texas A&M is any indication of what the K-State offense can do, look for Dylan Meier to throw the ball at least 30 times. If the Kansas defensive backs are able to lock up the receivers, Brian Casey will be huge as the second or third option over the middle.

Losing the campaign

Sproles' Heisman chances might be gone, but the season is far from over Darren Sproles' chances at the Heisman Trophy are looking as dim as ever.

With several back-breaking fumbles in the Wildcats' 42-30 loss at Texas A&M and only 61 yards on 20 carries, many college football experts have written off the senior running back's Heisman campaign.

It's hard to blame them.

Sproles has coughed up the football a whopping seven times in four games. That's not the stuff of a Heisman Trophy winner.

But here's a news-flash for a few of the haters springing up now — the guy's still pretty damn good.

Everybody — fans, national media, myself — have tried to dissect the mindset of Sproles.

"My God, how is this happening? He can't take the pressure. Blah, blah, blah."

We've got to stop.

There's no way people from the outside can judge what's going inside of the head of a guy as reserved as Sproles — it's nearly-impossible to know anybody's frame of mind.

Is he pressing?

Maybe.

Sproles has not been able to really get off the ground against quality opponents in Fresno State and the Aggies, and most of his fumbles have not exactly popped out after massive hits.

But Sproles is still very, very good.

Despite many lows this season for the 5-foot-7, 180 pound running back, Sproles has compiled 611 yards and two touchdowns on the ground.

I know I've said this more than once this season, but we're going to see Sproles show his stuff soon against a top-quality opponent.

Look at last year.

Sproles had some less than standout games, rushing for 74 yards and no touchdowns against Oklahoma State and gaining only 38 rushing yards against Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl.

But this was a guy, the same season, who torched Oklahoma for more than 300 total yards in the Big 12 Championship Game.

You don't just lose that ability. It's still there.

The key is for other Wildcats to step up on the offense, and if the A&M game was any indication, it's happening.

Sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier lit up the Aggies for 246 yards and three touchdowns, not even fazed by one of the toughest road atmospheres in the country.

Meier, along with a deep core of receivers and the very-underrated Brian Casey at tight end, make up a pretty talented group.

The point is, Sproles — who prior to the season was viewed as the alpha and the omega of the Wildcat offense — should be able to reflect on the A&M game, take a deep breath and realize he doesn't have to do everything.

Meier is not the weak link to the offense, as some thought prior to the season; he's a big-time player in the making.

We can't step inside Sproles' head to understand the reasoning behind the fumbles and the poor performances against Fresno State and Texas A&M. Not even Coach Bill Snyder knows.

But there is one thing we do know — Sproles' deep desire to win.

Though one could argue that desire might have the running back trying to do too much, we all know Sproles will do whatever it takes to step up his game.

And some of that might require him to relax and just do his thing.

The Heisman might not be coming Sproles' way this season, but the numbers and the ability to hold onto the football will.

So Sproles might not take the Heisman Trophy home from New York after the regular season — big deal.

It's about the team now. It's about getting wins. It's about beating KU again.

Actually, maybe we can see inside of Sproles' head — because I'm willing to bet that's exactly what he's thinking right now.

OFFENSE

Things are looking up. After Dylan Meier's 29 for 45 passing performance last Saturday, we know the Cats can run or throw the ball with success. It would be nice to do both in the same game. The offensive line looked better against Texas A&M, and outside of a few dropped balls, the receivers delivered a clutch performance. Turnovers are an issue after giving up the ball four times, but the player responsible for two of those turnovers, senior running back Darren Sproles will be back to his usual amazing self against the Jayhawks.

The Jayhawks are averaging 27.8 points per game behind an air attack ranked No. 31 in the nation and second in the Big 12 Conference. Quarterback Adam Barmann, who averages 225.4 yards passing a game, leads the charge. Barmann has thrown eight touchdowns this year, four of those to his favorite target, receiver Brandon Rideau. Kansas adds another 100 yards per game rushing, led by running back John Randle's 66.6 yards per game. The Jayhawks put up 30 points on Texas Tech, but only eight in last week's loss at Nebraska.

DEFENSE

The Wildcats gave up six touchdown drives of a combined 19 plays against the Aggies last week. With the exception of the big plays and the continued struggle to get a stop on third down, the defense played better. K-State is 11th in the Big 12 against the run, giving up 156 yards per game, but it's third against the pass, yielding just 170.8 yards a game. This unit probably won't become as dominant as past K-State defenses, but it will continue to improve and should have its best outing of the season.

Kansas is second in the Big 12 in sacks (12 in five games) and third in turnover margin (plus nine on the year) thanks to the defense's 11 interceptions. The Jayhawks are solid, if not intimidating, led by safety Tony Stubbs (two interceptions, 30 tackles), cornerback Charles Gordon (two interceptions), and linebackers Nick Reid (46 tackles, two sacks) and Banks Floodman (Big 12 honorable mention last year). The Jayhawks held Nebraska to 14 points last Saturday. They won't be quite as successful this week.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Joe Rheem is still perfect for the season on field goals and extra points. Other than that, the Wildcats are ranked last in the conference in both punting (29.2 yards per attempt) and punt returns (seven yards per attempt). They are averaging 23.8 yards per kickoff return, and Sproles is still a threat as a returner as long as he holds onto the ball.

The Jayhawks average 39.2 yards per punt and 24.2 yards per kickoff return. Gordon, an All-American return man last year as a freshman can potentially score every time he touches the ball. Their weakness is the kicking game, as Scott Webb and Johnny Beck have combined for 6-of-13 on field goals.

INTANGIBLES

K-State is coming off a tough loss at Texas A&M, but several questions were answered in that game. Also, the Wildcats are the least-penalized team in the Big 12, while their opponents have been penalized the most. It is a road game, to use the definition loosely. There should be plenty of purple Saturday in Memorial Stadium. And finally, K-State is undefeated in non-televvised games this season.

The Jayhawks suffered another heart-breaking loss last week, falling to Nebraska 14-8. It was their third straight loss, all by less than 10 points. They haven't played K-State closer than two touchdowns since 1994 — that's due to change sometime. Lastly, the game is Kansas' homecoming, which adds a little extra motivation if the Jayhawks didn't have enough for this game already.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 45 - KANSAS 21

Coach Mark Mangino is making progress — however slow — with the Jayhawks, and someday Kansas will finally get a win in the Sunflower Showdown. But it probably won't be this decade. For now, Kansas should enjoy being in the game past the first quarter. The Wildcats will win No. 12 in a row.

Aerial assault unleashed

K-State receivers look to sustain the improved Wildcat passing game

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Before last week's game against Texas A&M, K-State's passing attack had been kept under wraps.

In the previous three games, the Wildcats had thrown the ball a total of 54 times while rushing 196 times.

Before the season many, including Coach Bill Snyder, said this year's wide receivers had the potential to be the best K-State has ever had.

Even after the loss to A&M, many now see why K-State's wide receivers were so heralded.

Sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier passed for 246 yards and three touchdowns in the game. On the night, Meier completed 29 of 45 passes.

Sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira said he thought the passing game proved itself against A&M.

"We came up when they needed us," Moreira said. "When they called our numbers, we showed up."

K-State fell behind by as much as 28 points against A&M and spent most of the second half playing catch-up. In order to preserve time, the Wildcats turned to their passing game.

Moreira and junior Yamon Figs each had five catches on the night for totals of 32 and 50 yards, respectively. Moreira also scored three touchdowns, while Figs had one.

Snyder said the improved play of Moreira and Figs was a bright spot on the night.

"Jermaine played well in the ballgame, and we've known all along that Jermaine has the capabilities that would allow him to do some of those things," Snyder said. "Yamon, we've seen through the course of the past couple of months that he has those capabilities."

At A&M, seven different receivers caught a pass. Sproles was the leading receiver with six catches, but every receiver used had at least three catches.

Meier said the distribution was a key improvement, but the team still failed to complete its goal.

"Distributing the ball around is nice, but getting the win is most important, and we didn't accomplish that," Meier said.

Snyder said he never specifically plans which receiver to throw to. Instead, he said the play-calling is based on the look of the opposing defense.

"It's a matter of where (the defense) will allow you to place the ball. Our receivers made a couple of plays that escaped some tackles and were able to get the ball into the end zone," Snyder said.

Heading into the KU game, Wildcat receivers have the task of trying to keep the momentum from the A&M game.

Moreira said the receivers must maintain a high level of consistency in order for the Wildcats to be successful against the Jayhawks and the rest of their opponents.

"We just need to (perform) consistently; go out there and do it every week," he said.

Jermaine Moreira tries to stay in bounds during the Sept. 4 season opener against Western Kentucky.

Coach cites quarterback's maturity

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Conference road games in college football often can measure the maturity of players, and in K-State's first conference game away from Manhattan, sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier grew up before his coaches' and teammates' eyes.

In Meier's first career road start and in front of 72,675 at Kyle Field, the Pittsburg, Kan., native completed 29 passes on 45 attempts for 246 yards and three touchdowns — all career highs.

"I thought he matured a great deal," Coach Bill Snyder said. "Every football game he has played has been here (KSU Stadium), and then to go into Kyle Field, which can be a very intimidating environment, I thought he handled it well."

Before traveling Oct. 2 to College Station, Texas, Meier had only 38 passing attempts for 326 yards and two touchdowns. Senior tight end Brian Casey said he wasn't surprised with Meier's performance in the quarterback's third career start.

"It's very impressive since he hasn't been on an away game yet and had to go through the crowd noise, and their defense was doing a lot of things," Casey said.

"Every other down they were blitzing, but he stepped up big."

Despite throwing an interception that put Texas A&M up 35-17, Meier led the Wildcats on a fourth quarter comeback, throwing two touchdowns to sophomore wide receiver Jermaine Moreira. On the day, Meier spread the ball around, connecting with eight different receivers in the 42-30 loss.

"You take that one play out of there that hurt us, he

Challenge in store for K-State; Cat fans aware

ANTHONY MENDOZA

I'm confused.

I understand the heated nature of K-State's football games with Kansas, but I just don't know why it is referred to as a rivalry, when the Wildcats have won the last 11 games.

It's like trying to call the men's basketball games between the two a rivalry.

Rivalry is not the word that best suits this game; more like lopsided, embarrassing or amusing. Kind of like what this supposed rivalry has been the last 11 years between K-State and KU.

During the Wildcats' streak, they have outscored the Jayhawks 460-97, or as the KU coaches and fans have called it, "Snyder please put in the third-string quarterback and running back. You're killing us."

The last competitive game between the two teams was in 1994, when the Big 12 Conference was still referred to as the Big Eight. Since then it's been scores of 41-7, 48-16, 54-6, 50-9, 64-0 and so on dominating the interstate battle.

Players from both teams are saying all the right things coming into this weekend's match-up. Praising each other's offense and defense and coaching staff.

There isn't any trash talk, because there isn't much either team can say with the way both have started the year. Especially, K-State whose two wins this year are against powerhouse Division I-AA Western Kentucky and always-tough Louisiana-Lafayette at KSU Stadium.

Why give the opponent any bulletin board material when the teams are sadly so close to each other, even if they are your hated in-state rivals?

Kansas averages nearly 28 points per game, while K-State scores nearly 30, but the major difference between the two teams is on defense.

Even though the Jayhawks have faced tougher competition early in the season, they have given up less than 17 points per game; while the group that has yet to live up to their nickname has let their opponents score nearly 30 points per game. However, those numbers were inflated last week thanks to turnovers inside the red zone which resulted in 19 total yards and 21 points.

Perhaps this is the year for the Jayhawks to rise up and beat big brother K-State. This is their best chance in 10 years with the Wildcats coming into Memorial Stadium after a tough road loss.

All the signs are there for the Jayhawks to rise up. K-State has to travel to Lawrence, the No. 40 nationally-ranked rushing defense anchored by a strong set of linebackers that can slow down Darren Sproles. Kansas has a quarterback in Adam Barmann who leads the No. 2-ranked passing offense in the Big 12 Conference against a defense that has not been able to get a sniff of an opposing quarterback, leaving an average secondary exposed to the big play down the field.

For the first time in over a decade, there is doubt in Wildcat fans minds about what their beloved football team will do this weekend against the Jayhawks.

Fear in their eyes, kind of like the fear that Mark Mangino gets when there is only one slice of pizza left, and he's too far away to take a swipe at it.

Will this be the first team in 11 years to lose to KU, forcing their loyal fans into a drunken state to help them forget about their recent embarrassment? Or will K-State roll to No. 12 in a row, forcing their fans to drink vast amounts of beer in celebration?

I don't know, but either win or lose, one thing for certain this coming Saturday, there will be beer consumed.

That's the only accurate guarantee I have for you about this game, and for the rest of the season.

Big 12 North falters against South in 2004

By Eric Olson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. — The Big 12 North has gone south.

If there were any questions about the conference's balance of power the last couple of years, this season clearly shows it has shifted.

Nebraska and K-State were the class of the Big 12 when it formed in 1996 with the merger of the Big Eight and old Southwest Conference.

Though K-State is the defending champion after upsetting Oklahoma in the conference championship game last season, the Sooners and Texas are rightfully regarded as the standard-bearers for the league.

This is the fourth straight week the North Division hasn't been represented in the Associated Press Top 25. Before this season, it had been since November 1967 that not one team from the current North was ranked.

Oklahoma and Texas, meanwhile, are Nos. 2 and 5, respectively, and Oklahoma State is No. 22.

The South is 3-0 against the North in early conference play.

"Everything goes in cycles — conferences and even divisions," Missouri coach Gary Pinkel said. "I have no idea why it is the way it is. It's just the way it has happened. Obviously it's exciting for everybody in our division because of the opportunities that are there."

Why has the North floundered? The reasons are varied.

Division favorite K-State (2-2, 0-1 Big 12) is breaking in a new quarterback in Dylan Meier, leaving little room for star tailback Darren Sproles. Also, the Wildcats' defense has been uncharacteristically leaky — they are 11th in the league in points allowed at 30 a game, 14 more than a year ago.

At Nebraska (3-1, 1-0), the Huskers have struggled in the transition from the triple option to the West Coast offense, with Joe Dailey having thrown one interception for every 11 pass attempts.

Missouri (3-1, 1-0) was perhaps the most hyped team in the division entering the season. The Tigers have an improving defense, and Brad Smith is one of the top run-pass quarterbacks in the nation.

But a loss to Troy State shook the Tigers' confidence, which has been made fragile through two decades of mostly losing.

Colorado (3-1, 0-1), fresh off a sex and recruiting scandal in the spring, was the surprise of the North after rattling off three nonconference wins. But the Buffaloes lost 17-9 to Missouri last week and will be underdogs at home to Oklahoma State.

Kansas (2-3, 0-2), which went to a bowl last year, already is in a must-win situation against K-State at home this week.

Iowa State (2-2, 0-1) was winless in the conference last season and could be heading down that road again.

The Big 12 coaches say it's too early to write off the North.

Colorado coach Gary Barnett, for one, dismisses talk of the North slipping.

"On Dec. 4, somebody from the North is going to be playing in Kansas City against somebody from the South," he said. "National perception isn't going to help you or hurt you getting to that position."

Cats hope to halt turnovers

Snyder says team seeks improvement after loss

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Bill Snyder said two numbers stuck out in his mind after last Saturday's loss to Texas A&M — 21 and 19.

"As far as numbers are concerned, they don't completely define a ball game, but there's 21 and 19 that stick in my mind," Snyder said. "That's 21 points and 19 yards to get it."

In K-State's 42-30 loss to the Aggies, 21 of A&M's 42 points resulted directly from three of the Wildcats' four turnovers.

A&M had drives that started at the K-State 12, five, and two yard-lines — each resulted in a touchdown.

Senior running back Darren Sproles accounted for four fumbles during the game, two of which the Aggies recovered.

Snyder said he believes Sproles will overcome his recent rash of fumbles, and he has no intention of taking any responsibility away from Sproles.

"He feels confident that he can do what he is doing now and do it better," Snyder said. "If he has confidence, then I have faith in him, so we'll give him those opportunities and we'll see where it takes us. It was unfortunate, and nobody feels more badly about it than Darren does."

This season, Sproles is responsible for six turnovers, while he only has two touchdowns in four games. Snyder said Sproles' career numbers show he has one turnover for every 500 yards he gains. So far this season, Sproles has averaged 101 yards for every turnover — a considerable drop-off.

Running back's coach Michael Smith said he believes it might be a matter of Sproles trying to do too much and putting too much pressure on himself.

"Is he pressing right now? I do believe so," Smith said. "He puts as much pressure on himself as anybody I've been around. And it's good pressure, so I expect Darren to move forward and continue to make plays like he always has."

Through four games this season, K-State is minus-two in turnover ratio, which ranks 79th in the country. Heading into the game against Kansas on Saturday, the Wildcats will face a team plus-nine in turnover margin.

Junior defensive end Scott Edmonds said it is the responsibility of the defense to force more turnovers than the opponent, and against Kansas, he is looking for the Wildcat defense to come up big.

"That's one of our main goals; forcing fumbles, getting interceptions, and making big plays against them, because they are a big-play offense," Edmonds said. "The defense, we need to make those big plays against them. It's going to be really critical for us."

Snyder said the turnovers are not because of a lack of effort from his team or the opposing defenses keying on stripping the ball.

"It's not a matter of people reaching out and trying to knock the ball out of his hands and trying to strip the ball that way," he said. "Most coaches don't teach that because in that sense, you're not going to make tackles that way. I think you get good, hard hits sometimes and somebody's face mask and helmet go right through the ball, and that's a matter of whether you can hang onto it or not."

— the most by any running back against the Cornhusker defense all season.

The Jayhawk defense comes into the game ranked second in the Big 12 in sacks with 12 and is also third in the conference with a plus-nine turnover margin. Junior linebacker Nick Reid leads the Big 12 with seven tackles for loss and is second in total tackles with 32 solo tackles.

"I just see them playing very responsible defensive football," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I think they run well, and they play very aggressively and they are a very good tackling team."

The Wildcats are hoping to avoid starting the conference season 0-2 for the third time in the last four seasons.

K-State currently ranks fifth in the Big 12 in rushing offense, averaging 220.2 yards per game and eighth in the conference in total yards with 374 yards per game.

SUNFLOWER TRADITION

During the 102-year span the Sunflower Showdown has been played, countless players have graced the playing field, as the two schools have combined for more than 3,000 points.

Senior center Mike Johnson said that although he is not originally from Kansas, he understands how big the game is for the state.

"I'm not from the State of Kansas, but I can definitely sense that whole Kansas pride," Johnson said. "This game is very important to a lot of people. Coach Snyder has been saying he's getting letters on his desk from people who have been K-State fans for years and have enjoyed being able to say that we've dominated the Jayhawks for that many years."

Despite winning the last five Sunflower games in Lawrence, the Wildcats currently trail the Jayhawks 15-34-2 at Memorial Stadium, and during the 11-game winning streak, K-State has outscored Kansas 460-97.

Sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier said there was never any doubt about which school he wanted to play for while growing up in Pittsburg.

"Obviously, it's a big rivalry between K-State and KU, and growing up in Kansas it means a lot to me, but I'm going to approach the game like I did against A&M," Meier said. "We need a big win in the North (division), and it's definitely a stepping stone for us."

Although the Wildcats have dominated the Jayhawks over the past few years, some experts believe the game will be closer than what it has been, but senior tight end Brian Casey said K-State deserves more respect.

"It's exciting because they're coming in with a lot of confidence because they've played good the last few games, and we had dominated the last ten years or so. So that does anger us that we're not getting the credit that I think we deserve," Casey said.

Snyder said he is aware of the ramifications of the game, but said every game is crucial for the Wildcats.

"It's important for us to beat everybody we play," Snyder said. "I understand the significance of this ball game and that it means a great deal to our program, but they are all significant."

What the Jayhawks are saying about K-State

"I'd say they (K-State defense) are talented, but they are going through some changes. They've lost some talented guys on defense in the last couple of years and they are developing some guys now. Their defense will be better against us than it was against Texas A&M."

Adam Barnarm
QUARTERBACK

"It's a big deal (K-State rivalry), but we take it as any other game. I'm really excited for the opportunity to play them at home this year. Hopefully we come out with the victory."

Tony Coker
OFFENSIVE LINEMAN

"We have to play flawless football. We understand they are going to play great this weekend. They have played great against us in the past, and we have to step it up this weekend and see what we can do."

Latest edition of Sunflower Showdown will not be televised

Broadcast contracts relegate telecast to radio networks

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 102nd meeting between the Kansas Jayhawks and Kansas State Wildcats will not be available on television for the sixth year in a row.

Though the rivalry might have become one-sided in the past decade, Kansas still holds a large edge on K-State in the series, 61-35-5.

Jeff Goldman, media relations manager for Fox Sports Net Midwest, explained some of the reasons behind the decision not to air the game on television.

"The Big 12 has contracts with ABC, FSN and TBS," Goldman said. "ABC chooses their games and if they pass, it goes to FSN and then TBS. ABC chose Texas vs. Oklahoma at 11 a.m. and Oklahoma State vs. Colorado at 2:30 p.m. TBS chose Nebraska vs. Texas Tech at 6 p.m."

"Because of the contracts between the Big 12 and the networks, we cannot show another Big 12 game at the same time as the other networks," Goldman said.

Goldman said there was a 9 p.m. window available for the game to air, but Missouri at Baylor was chosen for television instead.

"We have a desire to put on the best game," Goldman said. "With the Missouri and Baylor game, it reached more of an audience than the KU-K-State game would."

Jim Marchiony, associate athletic director of external affairs, said KU talked with the networks about the game being televised, but didn't want it any more than any other game.

"We spoke with the Big 12, and the networks and indicated a desire to be televised. It's ultimately up to the networks to decide what is televised and what's not," Marchiony said.

"They decided this game wasn't one of the ones they wanted."

Jim Langer, director of national scheduling and collegiate sports for Fox Sports Net, gave even more insight about how the decision process for nationally televised games works.

"At the beginning of the year, we work with the Big 12 and set exclusive rights and non-exclusive rights on days and times," Langer said. "Usually the games are non-exclusive, which means we can show another Big 12 game at the same time as ABC or TBS.

"Unfortunately for this weekend, the games and times are exclusive," Langer said.

"And it also fell on a great weekend for football in the Big 12."

Langer said FSN wanted to televise the game even before the season started.

"At the beginning of the year, we really wanted to televise this game. After seeing KU improve so much last year and Darren Sproles turning it up last year, we wanted to air this one," Langer said. "We just couldn't do it."

"We had the choice between the two games (Missouri/Baylor and KU/Kansas), and Baylor really showed great interest and enthusiasm to have a game televised, so we went with them," Langer said.

played very well," co-offensive coordinator Del Miller said. "I don't know of an environment that is as difficult as that environment they played in, and he handled that very well, especially since you consider he's just a sophomore."

Meier directed the offense for 90 total plays and said he enjoyed learning under pressure.

"Going down there and playing in that kind of atmosphere is great for any player, let alone my first start on the road and it's something that I can build on," Meier said.

Snyder said the sophomore still has room for improvement.

"He still can grow in terms of game management, in the running game and grow in the passing game," Snyder said. "There's still a lot in front of him."

K-State senior dies in car accident Sunday

Meyer
SENIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State senior was killed Sunday in a car accident.

Barbara Meyer, a political science major, was driving west on I-70 near mile marker 320 when she was rear-ended by a semitrailer at 12:29 p.m. Meyer was then pushed across the median into oncoming traffic and was struck by an eastbound car.

The driver of the semi, Larry Bulmer, 64, of Ottawa, Kan., was not injured. The driver of the eastbound car, Angel Simmons, 20, of Topeka was treated at Stormont-Vail Regional Health Center and released. All drivers were wearing seat belts.

Kansas Highway Patrol Lt. John Eichkorn said Bulmer fell asleep while driving. No citations have been issued, however, the case has been forwarded to the Riley County Attorney.

Meyer was driving back to Manhattan after dropping off her fiancé, Scott Minneman, at Kansas City International airport. Minneman, a 2004 K-State graduate, is a first-year law student at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., and had surprised Meyer with a visit for her birthday.

Meyer was the opinion editor at the Collegian as well as president of the K-State chapter of Young Democrats. She was planning to graduate in May and attend law school in Washington, D.C. She graduated from Manhattan High School in 2002.

John Fliter, Young Democrats adviser, described her as an excellent student and leader, as well as full of energy and potential.

"I just wrote a letter for her for law school," he said. "Given her background and her performance at K-State, it was such an easy letter to write. I thought she probably had a choice at any school she wanted to get into."

Fliter, who taught Meyer and Minneman in his Constitutional Law 2 last semester, said Meyer challenged her fiancé to compete in arguing a case before a mock Supreme Court.

Candidates prepare for final debate

Bush, Kerry to focus on domestic policy

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tonight will be the last opportunity two presidential candidates have to confront each other face to face.

Sen. John Kerry and President George W. Bush will engage in the last of three presidential debates tonight on the campus of Arizona State University in Tempe, Ariz.

David Procter, head of the speech communication, theatre and dance department, said the debate tonight will focus on domestic policy issues.

"This is a pretty significant debate, because it's the last time these two guys will be on stage together," Procter said. "After tomorrow night, all we're going to be left with is political ads and very controlled images that the campaigns want us to see."

This debate, he said, will be structured much like the first one in which the candidates are asked questions from a moderator rather than from audience members.

"Kerry will talk about how Bush has supported oil interests over the people, and I'm sure the President will talk about all the tax cuts he has delivered," Procter said. "I'm positive that Senator Kerry will talk about low economic numbers."

He said the format of the debate will affect the way things pan out.

"The format seems to help Senator Kerry because it tends to be more formal and Senator Kerry is a more formal guy," Procter said.

"It doesn't really allow the President to get out and walk around and interact, which I think he did pretty well in the second debate."

He also said the fact that the questions are coming from a newperson rather than audience members could be

Jayhawks give Wildcats 2nd conference loss

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the first time in 11 years the K-State Wildcats didn't come away with the Governor's Cup in the Sunflower Showdown, losing to Kansas 31-28 on Saturday in Lawrence.

"We fought hard again, but somehow, somehow, we keep finding a way to not come up on the good side of the stick," senior cornerback Cedric Williams said after the game.

After the loss, Coach Bill Snyder said it was a test of his team's character.

"This is one of those great tests in life that carries over to what life's lessons really are," Snyder said. "What's important to our football team is how we respond and if we respond in the appropriate way with courage, which I believe our youngsters have. They respond by bonding and drawing closer together and maybe become more committed to being more disciplined."

It's been four days since the Wildcats (2-3, 0-2) were upset by their in-state rival, and players and coaches said they have moved on and are preparing for a rematch of last season's Big 12 Conference Championship against No. 2 Oklahoma (5-0, 2-0).

"I think every individual is a little different, and there is a process everyone goes through, and some go through the process a little faster than others, but I think, by and large, my perception was that they were entering into the anger stage and the time has come to take a stand," Snyder said Tuesday at K-State's weekly press conference.

"This was a real wake-up call, perhaps, and I haven't been disappointed in the way the response has gone, but we still have a long ways ahead of us."

The loss marked the fourth straight year K-State has opened up conference play with back-to-back defeats, but senior tight end Brian Casey said it's a new season for the Wildcats.

"We know where we stand now in the conference and where we stand in getting to a bowl game, and we just decided to start a new season right now,

HEADLINES FROM THE NATION'S UNIVERSITIES

Kerry rally crashed

ST. LOUIS — Before heading back to Carbondale Friday night, the Southern Illinois University-Carbondale College Republicans had one more thing to take care of.

At about 9 p.m., about 50 SIUC students gathered incognito within St. Louis' American Center.

"I feel really dirty right now," said Jason Jording, a third-year law student from Eureka, Ill.

Pretending to support Democratic presidential nominee Sen. John Kerry is not Jording's idea of fun on a Friday night.

In fact, it's humiliating.

Nonetheless, the group dutifully took heed of College Republicans president John Teresi's advice earlier on the bus.

"Just be real low-key, be really respect- ful," Teresi said. "We're going to hear a lot of Democrats [say Bush is bad]. Just try not to laugh at them."

Jording, along with the SIUC College Republicans, marched down the pro- Kerry rally to disrupt the scene and hail President Bush.

After using the washrooms, purchasing some food and taking group pictures, the rebels slowly gained momentum for the deliberate exit.

They revealed their true colors, shed- ding the sweatshirts covering their Bush/Cheney T-shirts and ripping their Kerry posters to pieces.

"Four more years! Four more years!" the students yelled on their way back to the front doors as some incoming Kerry supporters sneered at them.

SOBER STUDENTS REALLY EXIST

BOULDER, Colo. — While more col- lege students all over the nation are dying from alcohol than ever before, not every- one on university campuses this year is overindulging in alcohol consumption. In fact, here at Colorado University, roughly one in ten students is abstaining from drinking all together, and an even larger portion than that is choosing to drink only in moderation.

Bob Maust, chair of the standing com- mittee on substance abuse at CU, said there are a number of students in Boulder who choose to attend college in a state of sobriety. He said number hasn't been going down.

"It's held fairly constant over the years," Maust told the Colorado Daily Monday. "It's around 10 percent."

According to a 2001 Harvard Alcohol Study, 9 percent of CU students abstained from drinking that year, while 37 percent said they do drink but don't binge. Binge drinking is loosely classified as more than four to five drinks in a row.

CU senior Chris Deardorff, who led the "Debunking the Myth" campaign last year against the Princeton Review Party School ranking, said he chooses not to get drunk for personal reasons.

"I think it's just a lifestyle choice," he said Monday, pointing out that he doesn't have enough money to waste it all at the bars. "I just hang with my friends and do other things."

Reports are taken directly from Riley County Police Department's daily logs. The Collegian does not list wheel locks or minor traffic violations because of space constraints.

Queer Straight Alliance plans Coming Out Week events

By Stephanie Swoboda
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students all over campus will be "coming out of the closet" from Oct. 13 to 15.

Members of the Queer Straight Alliance will be providing a door and some encouragement for National Coming Out Week.

According to www.fact-index.com, coming out of the closet describes voluntarily making public one's sexual or orientation.

"We'll have a closet door that

Did you know? Coming Out Week

"Coming Out Week is a national event to celebrate gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered and intersexed folks, as well as their straight allies affirming their sexual orientation," Leigh Fine, senior in chemistry science, said.

anyone, regardless of their orientation, can walk through to assert their sexual identity," said Leigh Fine, senior in chemistry science and president of QSA.

The celebration will take place in the Bosco Student Plaza. Other planned activities include a "Walk of Flame," which will include chalked quotes from famous gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered people and also an information table.

Matt McCoy, junior in political science, said the information table will have a poster with pictures of GLBT students on it. Students will be asked to pick out the GLBT student in the picture.

"The object of this project is to get the average passerby to 'Find the GLBT' in the various pictures. I plan to make it very difficult, and the aim of the whole project is to enforce the idea that snapshot perceptions of people can be very wrong," McCoy said.

Fine said the purpose of the event is to celebrate the beauty of everyone who is affirming their sexual identity.

"By holding these events, QSA hopes to celebrate our own sexual identities and to educate others about the importance of their own sexual orientation. We also hope to bridge the gap of misunderstanding people may have about gay, lesbian, bisexual and transsexual people," Fine said.

Many QSA members will affirm their own sexual identities. This is the second year that Anthony Garcia has participated in the QSA Coming Out Week.

He looks forward to representing the GLBT community on campus and educating others.

"Sometimes people view the GLBT community as unicorns, believing that we really don't exist, but we do. We are your brothers, your sisters, your roommates and your teachers. We've always been here, and we are here to stay. So maybe we should try to get along and understand one another," Garcia said.

Garcia encourages students to participate in the activities, even if they are hesitant.

"Coming Out Week is meant to be a celebration of freedom," Garcia said.

"Those that are in the closet can come out in pride and in the comfort of knowing that they have friends and people that understand what they have been going through. After all, the closet can be a lonely place."

United Way aims to increase total donations

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State United Way campaign for this year is planning to go above and beyond last year's goal.

Maxine Coffey, executive director of the Riley County United Way, said that like last year the goal is not monetary.

"We are just looking to improve on our performance from last year," she said.

The K-State campaign had more than 1,000 donors and received more than $100,000 in donations for the United Way last year, Coffey said.

"That was about a 21-percent increase over the previous year," she said.

Janice Dinkel, co-chair of the K-State United Way campaign, said there are several ways the organization will try to exceed last year's performance.

"We are going to have a trick-or-treat for those who don't have enough to eat," she said. "We are going to chalk on the sidewalks, and we are going to send e-mails to K-State employees encouraging them to donate to the United Way."

Dinkel said there also will be an Oct. 29 event with a Halloween theme. However, plans are still in progress for the events.

Loleta Sump, committee member for the K-State United Way campaign, said there will be a drawing for prizes at the end of the campaign for people who donated to the United Way, along with people who did not.

"There are some CDs of the K-State Marching Band, tickets to a McCain performance, and the Speech Department donated two tickets for Greece," she said.

Student, faculty and staff participation is important for the university campaign, Dinkel said.

"We are just so encouraged by our success of last year, and we want to build on that," she said. "We believe that because we have great volunteers for the campaign we will be able to increase the amount of donors and the amount of money raised."

Barbara Meyer's life, values inspiration for community

On Saturday, the K-State football team experienced a devastating loss.

That loss pales in comparison to the loss the Collegian, K-State and the rest of the Manhattan community experienced Sunday.

Collegian Opinion Editor Barbara Meyer left us on Sunday.

Right up until the automobile accident that claimed her precious life, Barbara touched the lives of everyone around her.

Her enthusiasm, optimism and compassion were infectious.

A dedicated, confident, intelligent, articulate and respectful person,

Barbara packed both her life and the lives of those close to her with happiness on a daily basis.

From a professional standpoint, her dedication to this newspaper, which she loved so much, was unmatched.

A selfless and tireless advocate for equality, Barbara did the best job she could do every day to ensure that the paper you read every morning was the best it possibly could be.

Barbara set a standard that we continue to strive for each day. She was a person who had the self-confidence to stick to what she thought was right, even when it may not have been the most popular stance, yet she always had the professionalism and respect to prevent a disagreement from becoming personal.

As a university community, we should reach out to Barbara's family in this trying time.

Barbara's family is asking that donations be made to a political science scholarship to be created in Barbara's name.

Contributions can be left in care of the Yorgensen-Meloan-Londeen

Funeral home, 1616 Poyntz Ave.

Even in death, Barbara will be reaching out to tomorrow's students and helping them to study in the field she loved so much.

Whether it be as a friend, fiancée, daughter, sister, aunt, editor, club president, CASA volunteer, Sunday school teacher or mission worker, Barbara dedicated her life to making the lives of those around her better.

It is in that way that she will live on forever.

We will miss you Barbara, but your memory will enrich our lives each and every day.

Stepping up to the plate

Kerry leading after debates

It's October, and it would be easy to liken the presidential debates to baseball, since that's what's on everyone's mind in the world of sports. But I won't. I'm sure it's been done somewhere else.

However I can't resist saying that after the first two presidential debates, the third will clearly be tantamount to Game Seven.

Most people seem to think the score is tied as far as who's won each debate: Sen. John Kerry leading off strong in the first, Pres. George W. Bush the winner in the second.

But judging from the performance of each candidate in the first and second debate, I'd have to say Kerry came out the winner in both.

The first debate was a definite victory for Kerry. He came out of the coin toss with the first question and hit the ground running.

Kerry's answer to the question of homeland security made wonderful sense — build an alliance.

Bush has failed to do this. Kerry recognizes there is strength in numbers and gaining the support of the U.N. and its individual countries is important.

Bush was on the defensive from this moment on. The majority of his replies were regurgitation of Kerry's comments.

This debate was a milestone because the facial reactions of the speaker's opponent were shown. I don't know if everyone saw what I saw, but that was one pissed off prez.

Kerry remained composed and spent the time he was not speaking taking notes on what Bush said. He used Bush's comments quite efficiently in his responses.

One of my favorite responses was one of Kerry's in which he blasts Bush for shifting his focus from Osama bin Laden to Saddam Hussein.

Hussein was not a threat to our country at the time, yet the Bush chose to go after him and occupy Iraq. And Kerry cleverly slides in a comment about how the job of killing Osama bin Laden was "outsourced."

Though many like to perceive the second debate as a loss for Kerry, I think he did the right thing.

Did you see our illustrious President furiously denying the fact that — gasp — he'd made a mistake in pursuing Saddam Hussein when intelligence clearly stated that Hussein did not possess weapons of mass destruction?

Kerry, on the other hand, talked about the damage here at home Bush has caused like the fact that his No Child Left Behind Act has fallen terribly short of its goals and is extremely under-funded.

I know everyone is concerned with the war in Iraq, but we need someone who has their head in the game here on the home front as well. Kerry has shown he can do that.

And though Kerry calls to mind images of Frankenstein from time to time, I'd much rather have him as president than Bush, who's manic, right wing agenda has hurt our country and brought death to our soldiers.

These debates have, regardless of who political analysts say won, shown the truth behind each man. In Bush's case, the truth is scary.

Bush consistency reassuring

Tonight is the final presidential debate and I feel it is important to inform the Democrats out there that Sen. John Kerry will not benefit as much from the debates as they think he will.

So don't get your hopes up, because I really hate to see donkeys cry. They always blow their noses at me.

We all knew Kerry was going to blow Pres. George W. Bush away in the first debate. Thinking otherwise is like moving to Florida and expecting to not experience any trouble from hurricanes.

What matters are the messages received and perceived by the people, not the ones transmitted by the candidates. This is where Bush pulls ahead, because people get a much clearer message from him, while Kerry is nothing but static.

I just hope somebody tells Bush not to stare blankly at the camera for half the debate again. Last time I thought the cable feed had screwed up and was about to give up on the whole thing before he started moving again.

After the first two debates, the two candidates can each be likened to a piece of audio equipment. Bush, obviously, is a broken record. He doesn't change message, and while it can get a little repetitive, the consistency is reassuring.

Kerry, on the other hand, is like a radio tuner that can't hold onto a station. I should sue him for whiplash thanks to the double-takes I did while he explained his position on Iraq.

First Kerry said Saddam Hussein was a threat to our nation and he made the right decision in voting to support the implementation of force. Then Kerry said it was a mistake to invade Iraq, a course of action he'd given his blessing to.

Then Kerry tries to pass off his "nay" on the $87 billion war supplemental for things like body armor as perfectly okay, followed by a criticism of Bush for not giving soldiers body armor.

Please make the room stop spinning, or I'm gonna Ralph (Nader).

Whoever wins, I feel sorry for tonight's moderator Bob Schieffer.

He's about to get caught in the crossfire in the final direct battle of one of the most savage races of all time.

I don't mind that my esteemed colleague and the Democrats think the grimaces made by Bush during the first debate were funny.

I must admit I was grateful to God almighty for the course of events in the vice-presidential debate. Any trouble Kerry started for the GOP was quickly forgotten once the "mangling of facts" from both sides began, as www.factcheck.org put it so well.

After the second debate took place last week, I wondered why Bush didn't insist on a town hall meeting format for all the debates. Bush shines when he's able to move around, while Kerry lumbers about like Frankenstein's monster, terrified of all the people being so close.

Tonight is the last showdown, and much is expected from both candidates. Both candidates realize that every action and inaction will be analyzed and judged by the media.

One request for the two candidates: For once, say something that doesn't leave everyone completely unsurprised.

Basketball team finishes Canada trip

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey picked up where he left off last season, and the Wildcats received considerable contributions from their newcomers this past weekend in Vancouver, British Columbia.

K-State went 3-1 during the exhibition tour that consisted of four games from Oct. 9-11.

Massey — last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year — played in three of the four games, leading the team in both scoring at 19.7 points per game and rebounding at 6.7 rebounds per game. Massey shot a blistering 68 percent from the field for the tour.

Freshman guard Clint Stewart and sophomore guard Fred Peete both started multiple games on the tour, and freshman guard Curtis Allen also saw significant minutes.

Peete, a junior college transfer, was the second-leading Wildcat scorer over the four games, putting up 12.8 points per contest. Peete shot 49 percent from the field and dished out 13 assists for the tour as well.

As a team, K-State outscored opponents by an average of 81 points per game compared to their opponents' 70.2 points per game. The Wildcats also beat opponents on the boards by a margin of 8.5 per game.

Two areas K-State struggled in were turnovers and three-point shooting. The Wildcats turned the ball over nearly 20 times a game and shot just 30 percent from behind the arc for the tour.

Here is a quick game-by-game wrap-up:

OCT. 9 VS. SIMON FRASER

The Wildcats shot 61.5 percent from the floor in the second half, defeating Simon Fraser 80-73 in the tour's opening game.

Massey led K-State with 21 points and eight rebounds and Peete provided a considerable lift in the backcourt, dropping in 18 points on 7-of-11 shooting. Peete also had five assists and four rebounds in a team-high 38 minutes.

OCT. 10 VS. LANGARA COLLEGE

Junior forward Marques Hayden went for a double-double with 14 points and 11 rebounds, as the Wildcats won 68-55 over Langara.

Coach Jim Wooldridge opted not to play Massey and limited the minutes of Stewart and Peete in game one of the Sunday double-header,

K-State wins both shows Saturday

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday was a day of beginnings for the K-State equestrian program.

K-State hosted the first equestrian show of the season, and Head Coach Teresa Slough became reacquainted with leading the K-State equestrian team into competition.

In her first year back at the helm of the equestrian team, Slough said she was pleased with the entire team's performance on Saturday.

"We were very pleased with how the girls performed. They rode very well, and the girls who didn't ride really helped organize and contribute all day long," Slough said.

There were two shows on Saturday, and K-State tied rival Black Hawk Community College for High-Point team in the first show, and won High-Point team over Black Hawk and the other five teams outright in the second show.

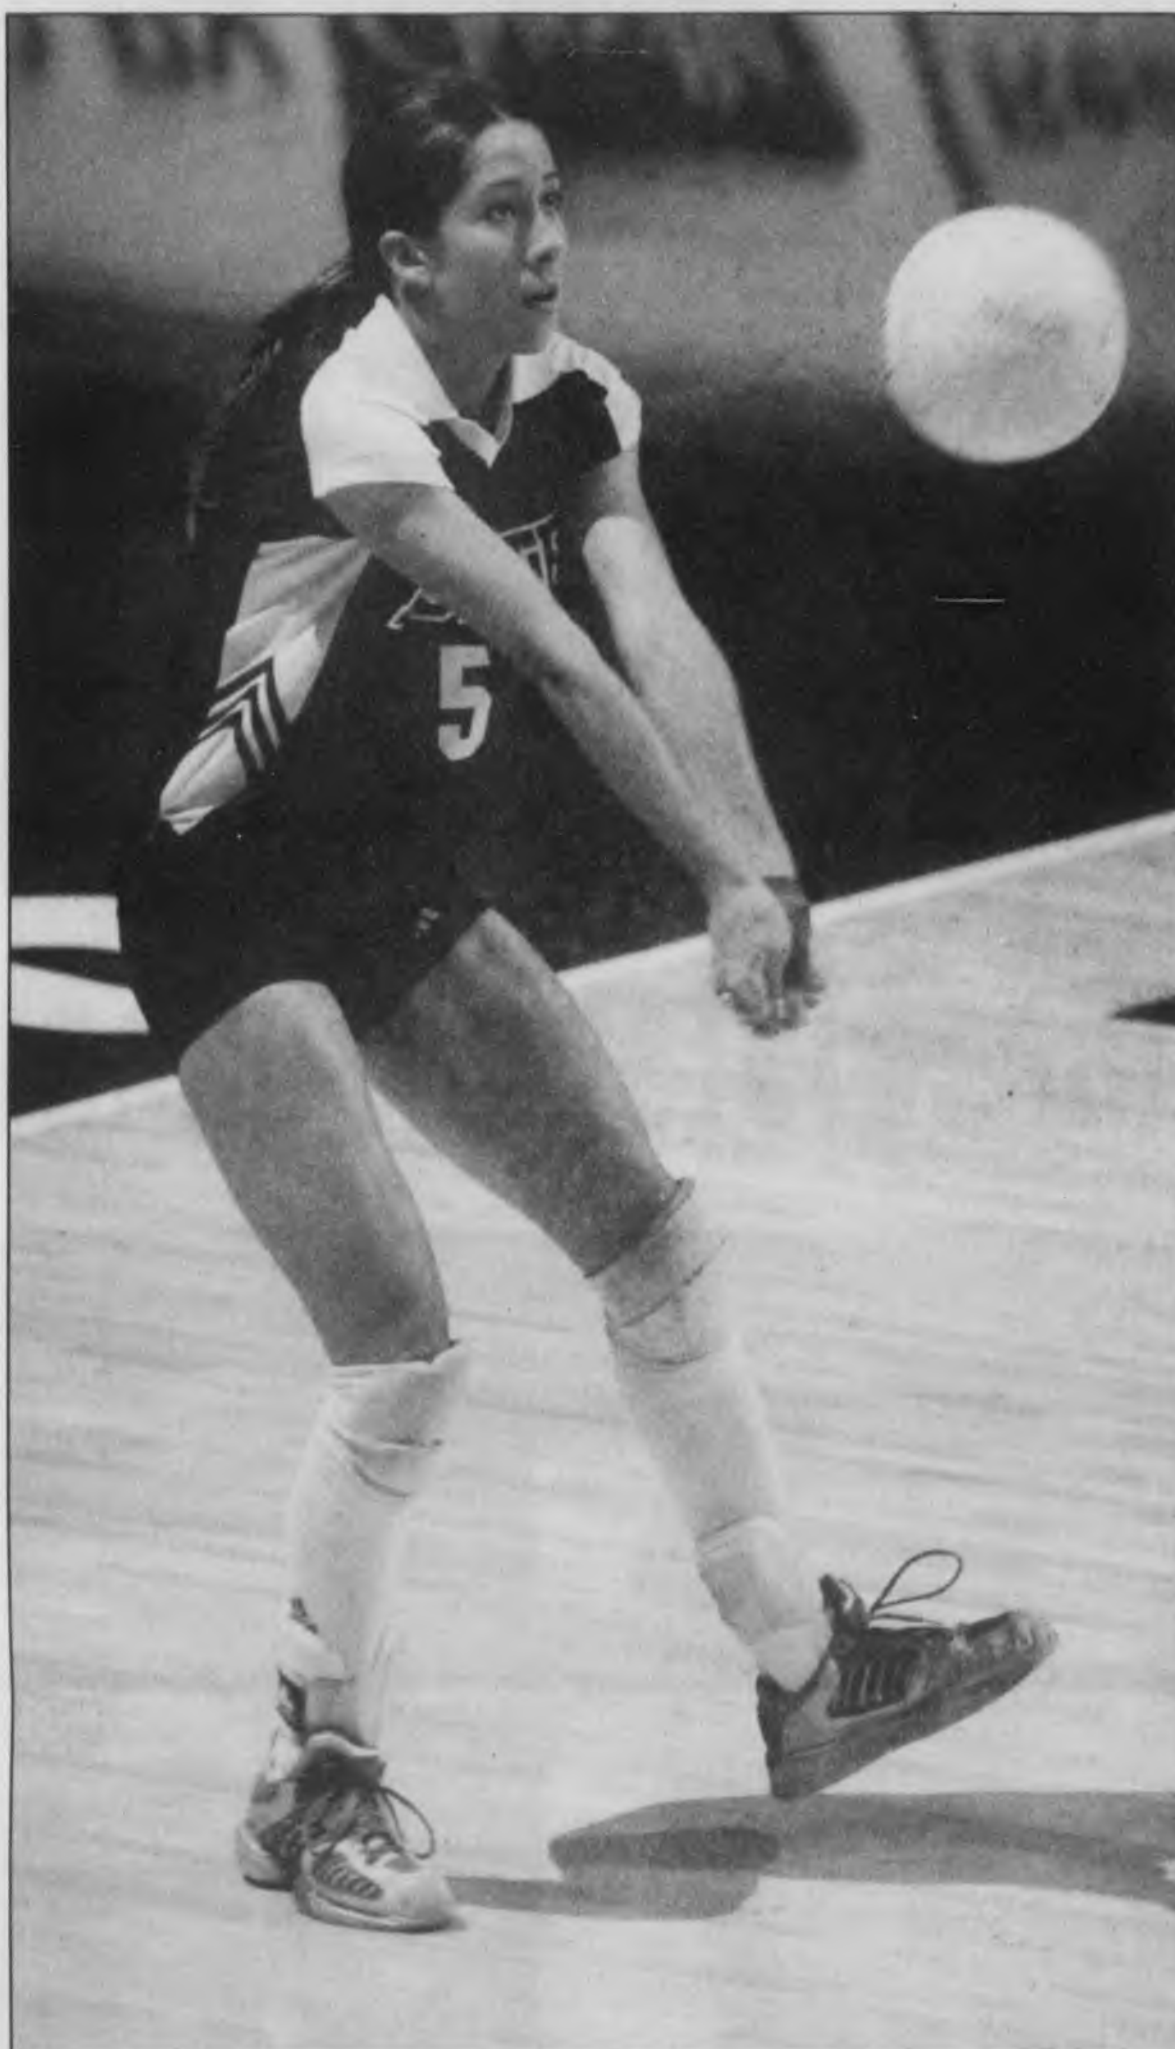

Last season, K-State finished second in its region with Black Hawk finishing first.

Sophomore rider Nicole Ruff said she felt the competition was caught off guard by the Wildcats.

"I thought it went really well, and I think Black Hawk was surprised at how well we rode, because it was the first show with a new coach, and our

K-State takes on No. 4 Nebraska after weekend loss

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's volleyball team battles No. 4 Nebraska at 7 tonight at Ahearn Field House, as the Wildcats try to bounce back after last Saturday's 3-0 loss to Texas.

In Saturday's match at Ahearn, the No. 9 Longhorns won 30-24, 32-30 and 30-23, putting an end to K-State's record 21-match home win streak. Texas outside hitter Mira Topic dominated, landing 25 kills in a performance leading her to receive Big 12 Player of the Week honors.

The No. 16 Wildcats fell to 11-5 overall and 5-2 in Big 12 Conference play. Texas stayed unbeaten at 15-0 overall and 7-0 in the conference.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she was not pleased with her team's effort against such a quality opponent.

"I didn't think we played with enough heart for the duration," Fritz said. "We started to get on a little roll in game two, but we didn't play with enough consistency to play with that team. They're very physical. They ball control well. The most disappointing thing was I thought they outworked us, and that's always been at the core of our value system; we have to outwork people, we have to work harder than everybody else."

Senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas tallied 10 kills while outside hitters junior Agata Rezende and sophomore Sandy Werner had nine apiece.

Fritz said the Wildcats are ready to move on after Saturday's loss.

"It's disappointing, but we move on," Fritz said. "We can't look back. We got Nebraska coming in here on Wednesday, and we're not going to hang our heads and feel sorry for ourselves. We're going to regroup and fix what's not working and put the pieces back together again."

Nebraska (13-1, 7-0) leads the conference in blocking and digging as a team.

Middle blocker Melissa Elmer leads the Big 12 with 1.86 blocks a game. Outside hitter Sarah Pavan and middle blocker Tracy Stalls are tied for second with 1.71 blocks.

Pavan is also third in the Big 12 with 4.76 kills per game. Libero Amanda McCormick paces the Huskers with a conference-leading 5.57 digs per game.

The Wildcats have been successful earlier this season when coming back after a loss, and Fritz said she thinks that trend can continue.

"We took a couple of losses early a year ago and were able to learn our lessons and bounce back," she said. "We're going to have some significant challenges night in and night out when we line up and we've just got to keep getting better."

WGLF | Freshman Quick leads Wildcats in Lawrence

Freshman Kali Quick had her best finish of the year, as the K-State women's golf team placed fifth as a team at the Marilyn Smith Sunflower Invitational in Lawrence, which wrapped up Tuesday.

Quick tied for fifth with a nine-over-par 236 — six shots out of first-place.

Two other Wildcats finished in the top-20 for the two-day invitational. Sophomore Helene Robert tied for 14th and senior Sarah Heffel tied for 19th.

As a team, K-State's fifth-place finish was its second-best of the season behind its fourth-place finish at the Ptarmigan/Ram Invitational Sept. 14.

The Wildcats next event — their final competition of the fall — takes place on Nov. 1-2 at the Edwin Watts/Palmetto at Oak Point Golf Club in South Carolina.

MGLF | Kern, James help Wildcats finish 5th

The K-State men's golf team shot its two lowest rounds of the season Monday and Tuesday, as the team finished fifth at the Alister MacKenzie Invitational in Fairfax, Calif.

The Wildcats shot a 280 in the second round Monday and then followed that performance up with a 287 in the final round Tuesday.

Junior Ben Kern was the top Wildcat for the invitational, shooting one-over-par over three rounds and finishing 11th.

In his best performance as a Wildcat, redshirt junior Jonathan James was three-over-par and finished in a tie for 14th for the competition.

K-State wraps up the fall season Oct. 22-24 at The Nelson in Palo Alto, Calif.

WTEN | Freshman wins singles title at Classic

Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia continued to tear through competition this fall, taking home the Flight B singles title at this past weekend's Hoosier Classic in Bloomington, Ind.

Kvaratskhelia defeated Indiana's Laura McGaffigan in three sets to win the title and improve her record to 7-0 on the season.

Senior Maria Rosenberg also set a career milestone over the weekend.

Though she fell in the semifinals, Rosenberg defeated LSU's Lauren Seaman in an extra match to give her a career record of 62-43, tying her for fifth all-time on the K-State singles win list.

K-State's next competition is Oct. 20-24 at the ITA Regionals in Tulsa, Okla.

Club Soccer | Students receive scholarships

The University of Kansas men's and University of Colorado women's soccer teams captured championships at this weekend's 26th annual KSU-Ed Chartrand Memorial Soccer Tournament in Manhattan.

A record 19 teams participated in the tournament hosted by the K-State men's and women's soccer clubs. Games were played at Memorial Stadium, Frank Anneberg Park and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Two K-State students received scholarships at the event. Laura Cannon and Jeff White — members of the women's and men's soccer clubs, respectively — were this year's recipients of scholarships from the KSU-Ed Chartrand Memorial Fund.

The tournament is named after Edward E. Chartrand, a former member of the K-State soccer team who died in May 1979 at the age of 22.

WBB | Saturday practice open to public

Fans wanting an early taste of K-State women's basketball can get that chance Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats will have an open practice from 8 to 9 a.m. sponsored by Varney's.

A pre-signed women's basketball poster will be given to the first 100 fans in attendance. Various team collectibles will also be passed out to fans, who will be entered in a raffle for an autographed basketball signed by the team.

Those wanting to attend the practice should enter through the Northwest doors of Bramlage from 8 to 9 a.m.

Quarterback decision leaves many fans with more questions than answers

"What" was the only word I could think of Saturday, when K-State took on Kansas at the 102nd Sunflower Show-down in Lawrence.

MATTHEW GIRARD

After the Wildcats took the opening kick-off to their own 23-yard line, the K-State offense trotted on the field with sophomore Allen Webb starting at quarterback. The press box and stadium began to buzz with one question — where is Dylan Meier?

As my sports editor and I looked at each other trying to figure out why the sophomore wasn't in the ball game, my buddy sitting in KU's student section called me in the press box to see if I knew what was going on, and all I could tell him was, "I have no idea."

During the previous week, no one, and I mean NO ONE, had any indication the Pittsburg, Kan., native, who had thrown for 247 yards and three touchdowns in his last start, would not start against in-state rival Kansas.

The questions then started running through my head.

Is he hurt?

Did he have an awful week of practice?

Was it disciplinary?

With Webb at the helm, the offense never looked comfortable and was only able to manage two field goals at half-time. In K-State's first six possessions, Webb completed four passes on nine attempts for 57 yards with an interception, and the Wildcats trailed at the break 7-6.

At the end of half-time we still had no idea if Coach Bill Snyder would stick with Webb or make the switch to Meier.

Then, with 10:45 left in the third quarter, the Wildcat faithful in Memorial Stadium roared with applause, as Meier made his first appearance in the game. On K-State's second possession of the half, Meier proved once again who the quarterback for the Wildcats should be.

Trailing 17-6, Meier led a 15-play, 85-yard touchdown drive, capping the drive with a two-yard plunge into the end zone.

Gallery founder brings book talk to local Hastings location

Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Living the Artist's Life: A Guide to Growing, Persevering, and Succeeding in the Art World," a book by Paul Dorrell, 47, was published in April by Hillstead Publishing. Dorrell gave a presentation about the careers of the artists he represents, Oct. 9 at the Manhattan Hastings location.

Dorrell founded the Leopold Galley - 327 East 55th St., Kansas City Mo. - in 1991. Prior to that he was director's assistant at Hill-Stead Museum in Connecticut. Dorrell grew up in Johnson County, Kan., and attended the University of Kansas. He majored in English but did not graduate.

He has traveled throughout America and Europe, and now lives in Kansas City with his wife and two sons.

Q: How do you go about finding the artists you represent? Is the name Paul Dorrell so big that they search after you?

A: At this stage in the game, they come to me in large numbers.

We have to be real selective because unfortunately, of all the artists out there, there is only a small percentage who have the discipline to take their work to the top of their game.

It's the same with writers and the same with musicians. It's not a matter of a lack of talent, but a lack of discipline.

The majority of people just find it too distasteful to sit in a studio day after day... We've had to establish a policy because so many people are coming in the door, or even passing through town wanting to look me up.

The policy is, they have to mail in slides and we'll return it with a letter saying whether we're interested, what can we do, what's our advice. Ten years ago I had to seek out my artists, for sure.

Q: This might be asking you to boil your book down into one quote. But, if somebody comes to you, not to represent them - maybe an artist or a writer - but who's trying to work as hard as they can and just can't get anywhere; what would you tell a person like that?

A: Perseverance.

If you believe in what you're doing, if you feel your talent to your very core, then you have no doubt about it. Don't confuse that with fame, fortune and old fashion notions of success.

Perseverance is the only thing I know that gets an artist through. There is never a reason to give up, ever, if you believe in what you're doing. If you don't believe it then you've got to reassess it for yourself.

Q: You worked for a degree in English, but you became an art dealer just to supplement your income while you're writing. Why art, why not journalism for instance?

A: Because I don't think I have enough willpower as a writer to write journalism all day and then go home and write novels as well. Some journalists can do that and go home at the end of the day and write novels as well. I couldn't, no way. I knew I had to dedicate all my writing time specifically to writing novels and nothing else.

Q: How does working in the art world affect your writing?

A: It doesn't take anything away.

I write first thing in the morning. My assistants are under strict orders that I don't take phone calls - unless it's a big deal [laughs]. They know I don't want to be disturbed.

I opened a business that is notorious for not making money. I'm already in a profession that is notorious for not making money, and it's like a double curse.

Sometimes exercises in that kind of naivety, if you can just bear it out, can bear great fruit, and it eventually did. But what a naive move.

The only reason I did it in the beginning was that I knew I'd have a place to write novels.

Q: How has your relationship with the art world affected your writing?

A: About two years ago I came up with a story that was a direct result of my experiences in the art world. I came up with a character in particular, who was a direct result of things I'd observed and experienced in the art world.

Q: How would a book like this have helped you when you were just coming out of school?

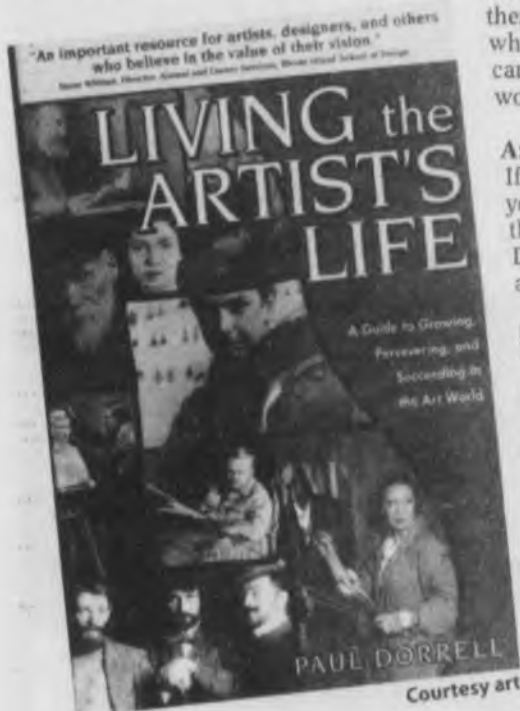

A: Oh boy. It would have let me know what a long road I was in for as an artist.

It would have reassured me during the darker days of my 20s. That going through those spots of self doubt and despair and questioning everything I was doing; it would have reassured me not was I not alone but this is common as a development for an artist.

It would have reassured me that as long as I stayed focused on the work and didn't get too worried about the success, fortune and fame gig; that the work would have to take me where I needed to go.

When you're young you want to go where the glory is. When you're older you realize, no, you want to go with integrity.

Sometimes you're so preoccupied with that bright light, you're drawn to it. The result is often calamitous, like it was for F. Scott Fitzgerald, like it was for Hemingway and a pretty long list of other people.

Billy Bacon and the Forbidden Pigs recall smokin' history

Billy Bacon has been on the road for 20 years. The fruit of that tenure is for sale in "Still Smokin' after 20 Years," the latest album from Billy Bacon and the Forbidden Pigs.

In the liner notes of "Still Smokin'" Bacon wrote, "It's not a 'Greatest Hits,' it's more of a collection I put together of songs I've written and performed throughout the US and Europe in the past 20 years."

It's hard to think of a musician who spends more time on the road. Bacon moved to Austin, Texas, in November, and said he has yet to unpack.

During an interview before his concert Tuesday night at Auntie Mae's Parlor, he said it's important to make the decision between the two, because the band doesn't have any hits.

"You can't have a 'Great Hits' without any hits," Bacon said.

The album includes 21 songs from Billy Bacon and the Forbidden Pigs' first eight albums.

"We wanted to celebrate our 20th anniversary," he said. "It's a pretty big milestone for us."

Emily Happer | COLLEGIAN

Bassist Billy Bacon backs up guitarist Mario Moreno on vocals during a concert Tuesday night at Auntie Mae's. Billy Bacon and the Forbidden Pigs are currently on a two and a half month tour while celebrating their 20th year. The band, originally based out of San Diego, Calif., is headed next to Minnesota.

"Still Smokin'" begins with the band's biggest hit, "Una Mas Cerveza."

The song is a raucous narrative about a run-in with 10 banditos, a situation solved only by una mas cerveza and Tex Mex music.

Growing up close to the Mexican border in San Diego, Bacon said he developed a love of Mexican music, which inspired songs like "Una Mas Cerveza" and "Hasta Manana Iguana."

The band pulls from nearly every type of music indigenous to the South.

Bacon cites everyone from big band music, Ray Charles, the Beatles and John Fogerty as influences.

Bacon's voice does sound like Fogerty. With a few extra pounds, a sharp suit instead of the dorky neckerchief and onstage acrobatics during his 200 tour dates a year, Bacon is at the same time more classy and blue collar than the Creedence Clearwater Revival frontman.

When the band formed it was just called the Forbidden Pigs, and each member had a porcine name: Porky Pete, Jeffery Jowels and Paul Pigskins. Bacon is the only original member left.

Even though these 21 songs are, "a piece of my musical history," according to the liner notes, Bacon would've been better off leaving out fat like the song, "You Don't Know."

Isn't fat where the flavor comes from? "Still Smokin' After 20 years" contains more meat than anything else and will feed your hungry ears.

CELEB NEWS

Jackson seeks ban on Eminem's new video

Michael Jackson is reportedly angered by the way he is portrayed in rapper Eminem's recently released video "Just Lose It." The pop singer is said to be so upset that he has asked networks to remove the video from their rotations.

"Michael Jackson is very angry. He feels that Eminem has crossed the line," Jackson representative Ramone Bain told the Daily News in Tuesday editions. "Michael is calling on all networks to pull the video."

In the video, Eminem appears dressed mockingly as Jackson with a group of boys in the background, jumping. Then he sings the lyric in reference to Jackson's child molestation allegations: "Come here little kiddie, on my lap. Guess who's back with a brand new rap..."

Later in the video Eminem also ridicules plastic surgery done on Jackson's nose and an accident in which Jackson's hair caught on fire while filming a Pepsi commercial in 1984.

So far, Black Entertainment Television has agreed to pull the video.

Reeve film to hit theaters in 2006

A company making a film directed by Christopher Reeve is vowing the animated feature about the New York Yankees will hit theaters in 2006.

The movie, tentatively titled "Yankee Irving," can move forward without Reeve because he had put in enough work over the last 18 months, IDT officials told The Star-Ledger of Newark for Tuesday's newspapers.

"The bulk of what he was doing as a director is fairly complete," Stephen Brown, chief financial officer of IDT.

Reeve died Sunday of complications from an infection caused by a bed sore. He was 52.

Matthew Perry to guest star on 'Scrubs'

Matthew Perry is sweeping back to NBC, but he won't be visiting his friend "Joey." Instead, Perry will be sitting in the director's chair and standing in front of the lens as a guest star for the Nov. 23 episode of "Scrubs," NBC has announced.

In the Perry-directed episode, the former "Friends" star will play a man willing to donate one of his kidneys to his sick father.

team was really together," Ruff said. "Everyone went into Saturday wanting to win, and I think that is the reason that we did so well."

There is a reason K-State fared so well as a team. Several riders, namely seniors Heather Zsamba and Kristin Tanney, excelled.

Zsamba was the High-Point rider in the first show and Tanney was the High-Point rider in the second show.

Zsamba finished first in open reigning and second in open horsemanship during the morning show. In the later show, Tanney finished first in open horsemanship and third in open reigning.

Slough was impressed with the poise shown by Zsamba and Tanney.

"They both did a good job of focusing and handling the pressure, they had been riding well in practice last week, and really showed great," Slough said.

Several other K-State riders placed well and helped to keep the show running smoothly.

Last week, a new assistant coach joined the team. Nichole Tiffany was hired to be the assistant coach for the Western team.

Her presence has enabled coach Slough to focus on the upper-level riders, while Tiffany coaches the lower-level riders.

Tiffany said she was pleased not only with the performance of the riders but also the organization of Saturday's show.

"It was very well-organized," Tiffany said. "The girls did a great job of keeping things running smoothly."

Due to the cancellation of the Truman State Show last month, K-State has added one more show during the spring to their schedule.

On March 5, K-State will travel to Georgia and have a head-to-head show against the Bulldogs.

Slough said she is pleased K-State will face some varsity competition before regionals and nationals, and she thinks the riders are all very excited about the forthcoming matchup as well.

The next equestrian show is later this month, with the English team traveling Oct. 22 to Northern Illinois.

DEBATE | Professor predicts aggressive strategies

in Kerry's favor.

Procter said he anticipated a very aggressive debate from both sides.

"I look for it to be pretty aggressive and there will be I'm sure lots of controversy and clash in this debate," he said.

This might be seen more noticeably, Procter said, when a candidate is responding second to a question rather than directly.

"They can sort of tailor their responses on whether or not they're giving the first answer to the question or whether they are responding," he said. "That part influences the strategies, if they know they have the last word, then they can really zing the other guy."

The importance of the debate extends beyond the spoken word, Procter said the non-verbal communication of the candidates has been very important in this election year.

"All kinds of research shows that one's non-verbals, or body language, communicates just as much, if not more, than what they actually say," he said. "I think we saw that in the first debate, Bush looked angry, frustrated, bored, all kinds of negative emotions. Senator Kerry looked very confident, engaged and interested."

Procter said he didn't anticipate much of a change in polling after this debate.

"In general, Kerry was behind going into the first debate, right after the first debate Kerry pulled just about even with the president and that's where we're still at today," he said. "I would anticipate that that will be the same after tomorrow's debate unless one candidate makes a mistake of some kind."

The two candidates have been criss-crossing the country over the past few days taking jabs at one another.

Bush attacked Kerry for saying terrorism could be reduced to a "nuisance" in an interview in The New York Times Magazine published Sunday.

The remark is featured in a new Bush-Cheney television commercial.

Phil Singer, a Kerry-Edwards spokesman, said the Republicans took Kerry's single sentence out of context.

"Considering that George Bush doesn't think we can win the war on terror, let Osama bin Laden escape and rushed into Iraq with no plan to win the peace, it's no surprise that his campaign is distorting every word John Kerry has ever said," Singer said.

Kerry's campaign focused on the rising oil costs, which are now at the highest they have ever been per barrel.

but several experienced Wildcats picked up the slack.

Senior forward Justin Williams scored 13 points and grabbed seven rebounds and sophomore Cartier Martin had 11 points. Sophomore guard Lance Harris turned in a quality all-around performance with 12 points, six assists, three steals and two blocks.

OCT. 10 VS. BRITISH COLUMBIA

Massey and Peete provided more than half of K-State's points, but it was not enough, as the Wildcats fell to British Columbia 89-84 in overtime.

Peete and Massey combined for 48 points in the loss, with Peete scoring a team-high 26 points and Massey shooting 8-of-12 for 22 points.

Stewart had his best game of the tour, adding 14 points, three assists and two steals.

British Columbia was near-perfect in overtime, shooting 4-of-4 from the field and 11-of-13 from the charity stripe.

OCT. 11 VS. UNIVERSITY OF VICTORIA

The final game of the tour was the Cats' most dominant.

K-State shot 63.5 percent from the field — including 74 percent in the second half — in a 92-64 win over Victoria.

Five Wildcats scored in double-figures, with Massey leading the team with 16 points.

Williams, Hayden and Martin with 14, while Stewart had 10.

Sophomore forward Tyler Hughes put up arguably his best game of the tour, with seven points and a game-high 10 rebounds.

COLUMN | Meier's decision to not play was a mistake that cost K-State

Meier would lead K-State to two more touchdowns, but it wasn't enough as Kansas upset the Wildcats 31-28. In only two quarters of play, Meier completed 15 passes for 249 yards and two touchdowns.

I think it would be pretty safe to say that if Meier would have played the entire game, the Wildcat nation would be getting pumped for Oklahoma instead of still being in a state of shock.

After the game, Snyder said

Meier didn't start because of injuries and it was implied by another coach that Meier pulled himself.

Again — what?

First of all, why would a competitive guy like Meier pull himself out of a game that means a great deal to him (being a Kansas native), and if he was hurt that bad, how did he manage to throw for 249 yards and almost bring the Wildcats back?

Then I heard from Meier himself at Tuesday's press conference.

"My body had doubts and unfortunately, my mind didn't overcome my body," Meier said. "The second quarter came around, and I think mind went over matter, and I told myself I had to do it, and there was no way I could just sit over there. I felt my team needed me to perform."

Now, I admire Meier for being honest about what was going through his mind, but he never should have shown any hesitation to the coaches.

For just an instant, he made a rookie mistake and it cost the Wildcats the game.

I know he feels bad and many might question his toughness and character, but I guarantee Meier won't make the same mistake twice and will become one of the greatest quarterbacks to wear the purple and silver.

Communication research group forms Faculty members to examine aspects of civic, political discourse

By Brad Kurtz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seven K-State faculty members have started the Institute for Civic Discourse in Democracy.

The organization was started in an attempt to better organize and present research examining the connection of communication and democracy.

"What we found was that much of the research that we do centered on how to speak more civilly to one another and how to speak civilly in politics," said David Procter, department head and associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance and director of the institute.

"Also, we were interested in how communication impacts democracy — for example, how communication can advance or impede democracy," Procter said. "When we saw that so many of us were doing research that connected, we decided we should found this institute that gave us a common mission and purpose."

The institute is housed in the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance.

Mary Tolar, executive director of Kansas Campus Compact, said one of the goals of the institute is to promote a healthier climate for debate — one focused on facts and ideas, not personal attacks.

"Our mission is to strive for higher civic engagement from students, faculty and the public," Tolar said. "We also want to affect the climate of debate both on and off campus. This crossfire-style of debating we always see is probably just a result of the way we've been brought up, but it's not necessarily healthy for a participatory democracy."

Procter said he hoped the institute would be able to improve, enhance and expand political communication.

"I think that too often when we turn on television all we hear are political critics or leaders yelling at one another. We hear all kinds of ideological slogans hurled at each other. There's not a lot of reasoned discourse or reasonable talk. We hope to create and enhance that kind of discussion," Procter said.

One of the problems in society is that Americans have become passive recipients of the news, Tolar said.

"A lot of the news we get is biased in one way or another," she said.

"It's impossible for the media to be completely objective, and people should recognize that. Acknowledging bias is a hallmark of credibility. If someone acknowledges that they have a bias, then the recipients of the information will be able to get more out of it, instead of wondering if the person has a hidden agenda."

While the institute is a faculty-led initiative, the founders of the institute hope to eventually get students involved.

There will certainly be a student component sometime in the future, but this institute is still a new idea," Tolar said. "As we explore different ways to reach out, there will be increasing opportunities for students to engage."

The Institute for Civic Discourse and Democracy has started to get students more involved in political discussion, said LeAnn Brazeal, assistant professor of speech communication.

"We've held several forums and discussions," Brazeal said. "We've also sponsored occasions to watch the presidential and vice-presidential debates, including a discussion afterwards. That way, instead of watching Peter Jennings or whoever discussing the debate, the television is shut off and students are given a chance to discuss what they've just witnessed."

Brazeal said the forums are a good way to encourage not just students, but all members of the community, to think and become engaged politically.

"We want to generate an interest and get people to read more, learn about issues and be informed," she said. "We want people to form their own opinions. It's like I tell students in my classes: I'm not trying to make people think like me, I'm more interested in just getting people to think, and figure out why they think the way they do."

Along with Procter, Tolar and Brazeal, founders of the institute include Charles Griffin, associate professor of speech communication; Donna Schenck-Hamlin, program associate for the digital library department; William Schenck-Hamlin, professor of speech communication; and Young-ok Yum, assistant professor of speech communication.

and Oklahoma is our first test in this new season," Casey said.

In the loss to Kansas, the Wildcats were marred by penalties — 11 flags for 120 yards.

There also was a change in the quarterback position just prior to kick-off. Sophomore Allen Webb made his second career start after incumbent starter, sophomore Dylan Meier, told coaches he couldn't go.

"It all boiled down to right before game time, and I was hesitant," Meier said. "My body gave me so many mixed signals all week, and it was a confusing time for me. When I became hesitant, coach made his decision."

Despite not playing in the first half, Meier rejoined the first-team offense in the third quarter and threw for 249 yards and two touchdowns in the near-comeback.

Snyder said he appreciated Meier's honesty before the game.

"He wouldn't want to do anything that would hurt the football team, and he is a very open and honest young guy. I have great faith and trust in him, so he's going to tell me what he really believes, and he did," he said.

Junior fullback Victor Mann said it was a tough loss to handle, but no matter what, the team has to be focused for the Sooners.

"With football you have to move on after the game because you have to get ready for your next game, whether you win or lose," Mann said Tuesday. "It's over, and you can't change anything, so we are just ready to get started this weekend."

her," Fliter said. "She didn't just study political science; she immersed herself in politics and law. She cared a lot about the world, and she was committed to leaving it a better place."

The Collegian staff met with representatives of the Office of Student Life and University Counseling Services Monday afternoon. Staff members also visited with her family.

"We lost a woman with a great fire inside her, but certainly not that fire itself," Patrice Holderbach, Collegian editor in chief said. "Barbara's desire to explore community issues, as she did last week in discussing the HIV-AIDS problem as it pertains to our community, was exemplified in daily conversation, in the topics she wrote about in her columns and in her general zest for life."

Carla Jones, associate dean of student life, said a date for a campus memorial service has not been announced.

While a permanent memorial is still being discussed by both Young Democrats and the Collegian, Holderbach said she could imagine what Meyer would want the Collegian staff to do in remembrance.

"What would Barbara want us to do in her honor?" Holderbach said. "I've got two guesses: One, put out one heck of a paper. And two, vote Kerry."

Fort Riley soldiers charged with murder by military officials

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Two Fort Riley soldiers have been charged with premeditated murder by military justice officials.

Sgts. Aaron R. Stanley and Eric J. Colvin were previously charged by the Clay County district attorney with first-degree murder after an incident 30 miles north of Fort Riley. The soldiers were charged in the shooting death of Staff Sgt. Matthew H. Werner and Spc. Christopher D. Hymer.

The civilian charges were then dropped to allow the case to proceed to military court.

Fort Riley officials announced Wednesday that Stanley is being charged with conspiracy to commit murder, premeditated murder, wrongful possession with intent to distribute marijuana, wrongful distribution and use of methamphetamines, absence without leave, violation of an order restricting him to limits of Fort Riley and adultery.

Colvin has been charged with conspiracy to commit murder, premeditated murder, wrongful possession with the intent to distribute marijuana, wrongful distribution and use of methamphetamines.

Officials declined to comment further as the case is ongoing.

Stanley and Colvin are being held in Geary County jail until military trial.

The soldiers were assigned to the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry, which is based at Fort Riley. Approximately 750 soldiers from the unit are serving their second tour of duty in Iraq.

Four other soldiers from the same unit have been charged in Iraq by the military with the murders of four Iraqi civilians.

Debate viewers say issues were ignored

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

President George W. Bush accused Sen. John Kerry of voting against tax cuts, while Kerry claimed Bush was responsible for the loss of millions of jobs in the final presidential debate Wednesday night.

The debate, moderated by Bob Schieffer of CBS News, was a blur of statistics on domestic issues. Job loss, minimum wage, health care plans and social security were the discussion's focus.

"There's a mainstream in American politics, and you sit right on the far left bank," Bush said of Kerry's tax cut voting record. "Your record is such that Ted Kennedy, your colleague, is the conservative senator from Massachusetts."

Kerry criticized Bush for the loss of more than 800,000 jobs during his presidency and the rising deficit.

"Being lectured by President Bush about fiscal responsibility is like Tony Soprano talking about law and order," Kerry said.

About 50 students gathered to watch the debates as part of the Debate Watch program sponsored by the Commission on Presidential Elections.

Viewers said they were most disappointed that the debate didn't hit on key issues including education, trade policy and the environment.

"Another thing we didn't hear anything about was energy policy," said David Procter, head of the department of speech communication, theater and dance. "I thought they would talk about how we're becoming less dependent on foreign oil."

But the main analysis of the debate, which was held at Arizona State University, was once again the non-verbal performance.

"It seemed like Sen. Kerry spent more time talking to us directly whereas President Bush addressed the moderator most of the time," Travis Floyd, senior in secondary education, said.

Bush, however, made drastic improvements from the first debate, said Erica Hazen, senior in public relations and rhetoric communication.

"I felt like if you compare his first debate to this one, he did a much better job. He had more

Hip hop in the Midwest

DJ Talz prepares music for a group of people last Tuesday at PJ's Restaurant and Pub in Aggieville. DJ Talz DJs at PJ's every Tuesday and Saturday.

PJ's crowd to see change twice a week

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Every Tuesday and Saturday, DJ Talz performs at PJ's Restaurant and Pub and delights the crowds with his abilities.

Talz said crowds will find the Saturday atmosphere different than it has been in the past.

"This fall we are starting to bring more hip-hop acts on Saturday nights," Talz said. "We are going to have some acts from the Midwest coming in. Nobody has tried doing anything like this in Manhattan before, and we're hoping to get this going and get the word out."

"In the past, hip-hop night on Saturday's was DJ's but we really want to get more hip-hop acts into Manhattan," Talz said.

Talz said, Tuesday's are going to be similar to last year.

"I'll be playing hip-hop music, no live artists, but they will serve cheap drinks,"

DJ Talz adjusts volume and other settings for music last Tuesday at PJ's Restaurant and Pub in Aggieville. With a live DJ, it offers people who go to the bars something different to listen to.

Talz said Saturdays are struggling right now, but things are hopefully going to be getting better soon.

"Saturdays are not very good right now, but we're trying get this off the ground," Talz said. "We're bringing in Asso from Wichita this weekend. Next weekend we are going to have Don Juan who is the most famous producer in Kansas, he'll be performing with Young Key."

Also coming up this month at PJ's is Merck Murders. Merck is originally from Philadelphia but came to Kansas with his best friend.

"My best friend's dad paid for me to come out here, and I'm trying to make a name for myself here," Merck said. "I was

Scarcity of flu shots boosts costs

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Flu shots aren't just hard to find, they are getting expensive.

A lawsuit filed Wednesday by Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline accused a Florida distribution company, Meds-Stat, of selling a 10-dose vial of flu shots for $900. The same vial was sold last week for $85.

"It's vitally important that people understand — those who desire to do business in Kansas — that we will not stand by as powerful forces attempt to exploit the vulnerable and jeopardize the health of many in an effort to unconscionably benefit," Kline said.

Flu shots became scarce after a British vaccine company was suspended, cutting U.S. supply in half.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said constituents have been calling his office complaining of price gouging.

"I was disturbed to hear from a Kansan seeking to provide a flu vaccine to residents of a nursing home that the distributor tripled the cost of the vaccine in a matter of a few hours," Roberts said in a letter to Secretary of Health and Human Services Tommy Thompson.

In Manhattan, however, the cost of flu shots hasn't mattered — there are no shots to be found.

At Lafene Health Center, K-State faculty and staff are being referred to private physicians. But, they don't have the doses either.

"We get a lot of request and it's very unfortunate," Medical Associates of Manhattan administrator Cathy Dunham said. "There is not much we can do about it we are just waiting to see what happens."

Dunham said it is unlikely Medical Associates will receive any vaccines this flu season.

The Riley County-Manhattan Health Department had 170 vaccines Wednesday morning but only for a select group of patients. In the past, the department has administered 4,000 shots annually.

"We had 170 doses that are from the state and are restricted for the Vaccine for Children

Iraq violence

A suicide attack and roadside bombings in Iraq killed six American soldiers Wednesday. The suicide bombing was the second deadly attack against U.S. convoys in Mosul in the past three days.

Court decision

A divided Supreme Court debated allowing states to execute teenage murderers Wednesday. More than 70 people who committed crimes as 16- and 17-year-olds are on death row.

Coin sales

The New York attorney general on Wednesday obtained a court order to suspend sale of a commemorative Sept. 11 coin. The coins have been advertised as being minted with silver from Ground Zero.

Body search

Authorities continued searching Wednesday at a farm in Morton County, Kan., for bodies. Attorney General Phill Kline said a search warrant had been issued but would not comment on the nature of the search.

Online portal project nears finish

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The portal project is coming closer and closer to a reality.

Erik Ankrom, student body vice president, said the project is moving along nicely and should be running and functional, though in an abbreviated form, by the first day of class next semester.

The project is an initiative to use open-source software from the University of Oklahoma to bring together students, faculty and administration.

"We've been working over the past several weeks to make sure our vision is in line and working to recruit people to help us," Ankrom said. "Once we get our team all structured and assembled, we can start doing the dirty work."

While some paid positions still remain available, Ankrom said the project director, technical director, content director and design directors, as well as more than 30 interns helping with content, have been brought on board.

Though Ankrom and Student Body President Hayley Urkevich made the project a major part of their campaign, he said they are acting in a strictly advisory role.

Chris Althoff, program director and graduate student in business administration, said his team will determine what students want from the portal.

Althoff said the initiative is unique because it is entirely student-centered.

"The most important part of this for us is that it is by the students, for the students," he said. "All of these services are going to be driven by what the students want."

The system, Althoff said, will personalize itself to users' needs by using a group management module. Users will fill out a profile the first time they login, and each subsequent login will display information relevant to that user.

In addition to this, Althoff said the project will allow students to submit articles for publication so that, in addition to the rest of the news provided on the site, students can ensure the things they want to be covered can be.

"Students have the ability to drive content," he said. "This can be source of convergent media where all types of media come together for students."

Althoff said the project will benefit the K-State community for years to come.

"This is a significant initiative, because it's a joint project between administration and students, and it's offering something this campus has never seen before," he said.

Technical Director Aaron Sloup said they are working hard to ensure a seamless integration with the University Portal Project, but said as students get used to it, they will realize its benefits.

"People might be hesitant at first, but once they see it and see how it caters to students they'll be able to embrace it," he said.

TO THE POINT Debates over, voters should seek real info

The presidential debates are over and if you are like most voters, you are voting for the candidate you liked two months ago.

While the debates did bring some issues to light, the format and pages of rules only restricted Sen. John Kerry and President Bush from actually exploring the finer details and differences between their campaigns.

Now the responsibility is in the voters' hands.

With less than 20 days until the Nov. 2 election, it's time to do some actual research.

The negative advertising, debate rhetoric and intense swing state campaigning will not provide enough information to actually choose the next president.

The debates brought up questions, and it's time now to get the answers.

What are Kerry's true feelings about the war in Iraq?

Voters should seek out a variety of unbiased news sources to research candidates' voting records, positions on the issues and specific plans for change.

Answering the questions now will ensure a year from now voters don't look back with regrets.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Duking it out

Debates need overhaul with series of games, heated fights

The debates just didn't get the job done — it's time for Plan B.

Plan B, like the debates, plays to strengths and weaknesses of each candidate, but also gives viewers what they want.

The debates are interesting for some "intellectuals" and the occasional "likely voter," but America can do better.

The three parts of Plan B will be mentally and physically challenging, but will offer no opportunities for convoluted promises and twisted facts. Instead, they will make more apparent the things Americans really judge their commander in chief on — style, grace and manual dexterity. Let the games begin.

Round 1: Scrabble

Obviously included to play to Kerry's favor, although Bush does maintain some advantages.

Both candidates were educated at Yale, although neither seems entirely capable of telling his posterior orifice from a hole in the ground.

Kerry is more of a word master, but Bush's secret ploy could finally come in useful: He has been inventing words for four years.

That extra "U" is now usable when Bush lays out the word "nuclear," and the simple "strategy" stretches to "stratergy" to reach a triple-word score. Unfortunately, Bush will be denied the victory upon his incessant assertion that the "S" is backwards.

Advantage: Kerry.

Round 2: Pictionary

Because the president should be able to communicate with persons from all nations and from all backgrounds.

Bush's cabinet will compose his team, and Kerry's top advisers will be his. Time is of the essence in this event, and because Bush thinks in stick figures, he has the advantage.

Additionally, Team Bush is accustomed to the president drawing rectangles to signify "that square state out west," and after four years has deciphered his language.

Kerry will make a run for the victory, though, when the Democrats cheat (again) and arrange his words to be "hair" and "Purple Heart."

Advantage: Bush.

Round 3: VP Talent show

Sen. John Edwards recites his favorite scene from "Othello."

Vice President Cheney stands idly, not having a heart attack.

Advantage: Edwards.

Illustrations by Sara Kissick | COLLEGIAN

Round 4: Hand-to-hand combat

The one debate where the candidates are evenly matched.

Bush's rough-and-tumble-looking Texas background versus Kerry's war experience and manicure-getting youth. The weapons must pass 27-point inspections by both sides before being allowed into combat.

Kerry's reach beats Bush's feistiness, but only because Kerry was not afraid to hit below the belt.

Advantage: Kerry.

Round 5: Pillow fight, Part II

This time around, the fight pits the Bush twins against Kerry's daughters. All pillows must be feather, and bonus points are given for skimpier underwear. In this round, youth beats experience.

Advantage: Bush.

The results are in: Kerry 3, Bush 2. Unfortunately for Democrats, because of the structure of the electoral college, Bush wins in a tight race. The founding fathers strike again. God bless America.

FRIDAY'S OPINIONS

LETA REPERT
Leta Reppert remembers her friend and co-worker, Barbara Meyer.

ABBY HILES
Abby Hiles draws comparisons between President Bush and a Kansas City drag queen running for city council.

What did you learn in high school?
I ask this question to people who seem puzzled by our family's decision to home school our children. Their answers are usually very interesting but not the kind of thing you would put in a campaign commercial tout- ing increased funding for public education.

I never thought of myself as a home schooling kind of person until after nearly eight years of having a variety of teachers and other professionals trying to tell me what was wrong with my son, I figured out they were what was wrong with my son.

In the last of hundreds of meetings where a group of professionals would try telling me why my son, who everyone agreed was an incredibly smart kid, was failing classes, a teacher said the magic words.

"He will do great in college," she said.
"Then why can't he succeed in junior high?" I asked her.

The room was quiet.
That was when I decided I could do better.
When you have a child you realize there are a ton of magazine articles, books and other resources to instruct you how to be your child's first teacher.

Television shows are lined up with experts preaching about how important a parent's role is in educating their little rug rats.

But the moment your child turns five, you are supposed to hand over the responsibility of educating your offspring to complete strangers.

Most families I know don't question whether public school is the best place for their children. They just follow the herd through the back-to-school aisle and make plans to leave their children to be raised by a government institution eight hours a day for the next 12 years. It was difficult to get outside the public school box. Public school is what we do in this country. It is what is normal.

Then I started breaking down the average junior high and high school experience and asking what makes it so normal.

Showering in a junior high locker room remains one of the most traumatic experiences of many people's lives. Why do we take children at the most self-conscious, awkward time of their lives and force them to get naked in front of one another? The only other time in your life you will have to shower with a group of strangers is in prison.

Not exactly what I want to be preparing my children for.

Public schools group kids together by age. Sounds like a good idea until you realize your child is learning communication skills, cultural values and social norms from other 12-year-olds. Great.

If a college student tried to keep track of seven classes, extracurricular activities, a part-time job and maintain relationships with family, we would think they were crazy. But this is exactly what we expect from high school students.

More than a few people asked if we were home schooling for religious reasons. That is the common stereotype: a large, fanatically religious family home schooling their children to protect them from the evils of the world.

Even a flaming liberal like me, who practices open-option religion, can understand why there are a lot of families like that out there. Ten minutes of observing life in any public high school would scare most parents. The students' wardrobes and topics of conversation in the hallway are a direct contrast to the watered-down history lessons, censored literary classics and politically neutered discussions of current events in the classrooms.

We chose to home school because we believed we could do better than a school system hell bent on making everyone conform into becoming the perfect politically correct members of the populous.

I do have to give the public school teachers some credit. They were right. My 15-year-old son is doing great in college.

He is a K-State freshman carrying nine hours.

Graduate students favor a union

MINNESOTA DAILY
U. MINNESOTA

MINNEAPOLIS — Last week, more than 200 University of Minnesota graduate student employees launched a campaign for unionization. Those in attendance mingled and ate food while boisterously speaking of the need for a union and what might happen in coming months.

They also attended to business. Research assistants and teaching assistants unanimously ratified a five-point platform and became the first to sign union cards with United Electrical.

United Electrical successfully organized University of Iowa employees in 1996, winning a 49 percent increase in base salary over the last eight years. While the United Electrical name might sound odd next to the words "graduate student," its successes in Iowa and history of union democracy are encouraging to graduate student employees upset at what amounts to pay cuts in recent years.

"Graduate student employees are overworked, underpaid and all too often overlooked."

Graduate Teaching and Research Assistants Coalition United Electrical Local 1105 identifies cuts in health care and student-fee hikes without a pay increase as the primary reason why it needs a union.

Some spoke eloquently of the hardships of affording dependent health care for children, or in the case of international students, partners unable to work. Others spoke of the stress they experience from tenuous job security and growing class sizes.

Graduate student employees are overworked, underpaid and all too often overlooked. If this organizing drive turns out results as those at the University of Iowa, the entire University of Minnesota will benefit from better-paid and healthier research assistants and teaching assistants.

Physics student and union activist Beth Lusczek, said, "We are at the bottom of pay scales of all the Big Ten schools."

The University of Minnesota is also the only school in the Big Ten with the right to organize that does not actually have a graduate student employee union. To stay competitive in attracting the best and the brightest, a democratic union makes sense for the entire University of Minnesota.

More support necessary for Pell grant program

MICHIGAN DAILY
U. MICHIGAN

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Education is once again prominently featured in the 2004 presidential campaign, but the candidates have largely neglected issues of higher education. In particular, the affordability of a college education for lower-income students is an issue of critical importance that has not attracted nearly enough attention.

Nationally, public university tuition rose by 14 percent in the 2003-04 school year to an average cost of $4,694 a year. Despite the increase in tuition costs, federal education grants for low-income students known as Pell Grants have not grown to cover the gap. The federal government has increased funding for Pell Grants by $1 billion dollars a year, but has capped each grant at $4,050 per person in an attempt to distribute funds to more people. Thirty years ago, Pell Grants covered 84 percent of the cost of a four-year public institution; today it covers 40 percent. The end result is that the average public university student graduates with about $20,000 in debt.

The increasing inability of low-income students to afford higher education has contributed to the polarizing rich-poor gap among college students. According to a report by the Century Foundation, nine in 10 high school graduates from families earning more than $80,000 a year attend college, compared to just six in 10 from families earning less than $33,000 a year.

U.S. Rep. Howard McKean (R-Calif.) said nearly 50 percent of lower-income college-bound students will not receive college degrees due to financial considerations. Fanning the flame, state deficits have led to massive cuts in state funding for public universities, forcing students and their families to shoulder even more of the burden.

Sen. John Kerry has proposed measures to help bail state governments out of their budget crises so that states can provide the necessary funds to their public institutions. Kerry has also proposed a $4,000 tax credit in order to finance post-secondary education. Unfortunately Kerry has no current proposal to increase the amount of money for individual Pell Grants.

President Bush has proposed additional funding for Pell Grants, including a proposal that would extend them year-round. Bush promised in the 2000 campaign to increase the maximum Pell Grant award, a promise he has currently failed to keep.

Saddling low-income students with an increasing load of debt unfairly impedes future economic opportunities for them.

Both presidential candidates should place Pell Grants at the forefront of the education debate, and the University should follow the lead of other colleges in replacing student loans in favor of grants for students.

TO THE EDITOR

Parking idea unfavorable

Editor,

It is a sad day when the University Parking Board thinks they need to change the parking restrictions that currently allow free parking after 5 p.m. on all of the campus lots. The arguments made in support of this policy change were specious at best.

First, the parking lots are not just lit for the convenience of those who park in them. They are also lit for the safety and security of those who walk through or near them. It is the same reason we have lights along the pedestrian sidewalks and on streets throughout town.

Secondly, I doubt you could prove the nightly "wear and tear" is the same as that done during the day. If you would like, I would be glad to set up a research project to count the number of vehicles parked in lots during the day versus night time, and do a vehicle count of ingress and egress for day and night traffic so we could actually state with some certainty the differences between day and nighttime use and its impact on lot deterioration.

In general, parking restrictions are created to ensure that opportunities to park in places of convenience are available to those willing to pay for that opportunity. The hours of enforcement typically coincide with the hours there is maximum demand on those facilities. This holds true of city lots, and most private lots in business districts I am aware of. I have lived and worked in the downtown areas of major cities, and nighttime parking is always free — with the notable exception of certain events scheduled at which time some lots charged rates because of the inherent demand.

I wonder whether the parking board is more interested in generating additional sales of parking permits, or in the collection of parking fines? I would like to know what their personnel costs would be to enforce 24/7 parking requirements. I wonder if parking enforcers might be at a higher risk for confrontation in nearly deserted parking lots at 3 a.m. than they are during a busy class day?

Frankly, I would rather pay a slightly higher use fee to the university when I enroll than change the structure of the parking enforcement, which will create bad will toward the university from those who come to events and functions in the evening, i.e. McCain performances, seminars, lectures, community programs, etc. What about parents who come to visit their children at night or on weekends, do we want to charge them as well?

But then I am only one voice — I wonder how many more voices like mine there are out there.

Ten things I hate about OU

MICHAEL ASHFORD

I am not a fan of the University of Oklahoma.

The Sooners really get on my nerves. Everyone associated with their football team, from the coaches to the fans, all seem to have a certain swagger I like to call obnoxious arrogance.

So this week, I picked the top 10 things I can't stand about OU. I can feel my face getting red just thinking about it. So here it goes:

10) Brian Bosworth – An All-America linebacker for the Sooners in the mid-80s, the “Boz” is the stereotypical Sooner football player. Arrogant, loud and generally has nothing intelligent to say. Yes, he was a very good linebacker, which may be another reason why I don't like him, but the cocky attitude this guy has is too much.

9) Oklahoma: 2000 – Could someone explain to me how the 2000 Oklahoma team was blessed with so much luck? Not only did the Sooners beat my beloved Wildcats twice that year, but they won a national championship, as if Oklahoma needed another one.

8) Bo Pelini – The former defensive coordinator at Nebraska not only cursed at Bill Snyder after last year's 38-9 Wildcat victory in Lincoln, Neb., but he had the nerve to accuse K-State of running up the score on Nebraska. Payback from years of Husker blowouts is hell my friend. Now, Pelini is with the Sooners, and I still don't like the guy.

7) The Sooner Schooner – This may be me talking crazy here, but I fail to see how a covered wagon is supposed to infuse the crowd with tons of energy and get them pumped before the game. It's stupid.

6) Barry Switzer – I have to give the man credit, he did praise Bill Snyder for being the “coach of the century” for turning around the K-State football program, but this guy reeks of dirty deeds. The Sooner coach from 1973-1988, his teams were out of control, disrespectful and downright classless while he was the at the helm.

5) 1998 Part One – When Bob Stoops was named head coach at Oklahoma, he instantly set out to raid the K-State coaching staff. He was a former defensive coordinator at K-State, and he turned his back on Bill Snyder. He sought out K-State coaches during the most important time in the history of K-State football – while the Wildcats were preparing for the Big 12 Championship Game.

4) Brent Venables – A linebacker for the Wildcats in the early 90's, I now consider him a traitor. He bolted from K-State, his alma mater, for Oklahoma in 1998 and has since burned many bridges.

3) 1998 Part Two – During the 1998 Big 12 Championship Game, it was already known that Mark Mangino, Venables and Mike Stoops were leaving for Oklahoma. Thus, the worst play-calling all year resulted in K-State's loss. I blame those three for not caring about K-State's fortunes. In their minds, they were gone. Only Venables is still at OU, but the sting is still felt.

2) Boomer Sooner – A one line fight song is hardly genius. So why does it have to get stuck in my head every time I hear it?

1) Bob Stoops – He refuses to acknowledge Bill Snyder as one of his mentors. He is arrogant, and he likes Steve Spurrier. He wears a visor. He is smug. I don't like him. Is that clear enough?

Huskers win three straight games to top the Wildcats

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ahearn Field House rocked Wednesday night after K-State won the first game of its match with Nebraska, and the Wildcats were poised to take their second straight home win over the Cornhuskers. Nebraska shattered those hopes and silenced the season-high crowd of 2,123 by winning the next three games to take the match 3-1.

No. 4 Nebraska topped No. 16 K-State 28-30, 30-21, 30-25 and 30-23 to remain undefeated in Big 12 Conference play at 8-0 and improve its overall record to 14-1. The Wildcats dropped to 11-6 overall and 5-3 in the Big 12.

After the win in game one, K-State hung with the Huskers for most of the next three games, only to see them slip away late. Nebraska had a 5-0 run late in game three to get a win and a 9-0 run in game four that helped it overcome a 17-12 deficit.

Coach Suzie Fritz said those two stretches played a big factor in K-State losing the match.

“Those two strings of points, that's where the Men's golfers tie career-best marks

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team managed to secure its fifth place standing in a 15-team field by scoring a combined 287 in the final round Tuesday at the Alistair MacKenzie Invitational in Fairfax, Calif.

The Wildcats shot an overall 859 on the par-71 Meadow Club – their second-best finish this season.

On Monday, the team carded a four under-par 280 in the second round – the team's best round of the season.

Junior Ben Kern led the Wildcats with an 11th-place finish and an overall 211 – his lowest finish of the season. After struggling earlier in the year with a couple of mechanical issues, Kern said he is almost playing at the level he is capable.

“I was putting well and struggling with hitting in the beginning,” Kern said. “Now I am hitting the ball well and not putting to my ability. If I can do both those things, I'll be playing really well.”

Junior Jonathan James tied for a career-best 14th-place finish with an overall 216.

James said after all his hard work, it is exciting to see some results.

“This is a huge step for me to finally start playing where I want to be,” James said. “Any time you shoot under par in a tournament, it's a huge confidence boost.”

The key to his success in the tournament was staying mentally focused, James said.

“I went out there mentally and just stuck to my game plan and didn't allow myself get down,” James said.

Coach Tim Norris said James' hard work has definitely paid off, but said he feels this is only the beginning of James' success.

“I think he can still continue to get better – this serves as more of a breakthrough for him,” Norris said.

As the Wildcats' fall season wraps up, Norris said the Invitational was a solid tournament for James and the team.

“With each tournament, the players get a little bit better. Hopefully, each player will continue to improve in the last tournament. That would be a great way to end the fall season,” Norris said.

James said he is also very pleased with the team's progress and performance this season, but there is one element missing. “Once we start winning tournaments, then we'll be where we want to be,” James said.

Women's golf team finishes 5th at Sunflower

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team lost its momentum Tuesday in the final round of the Marilyn Smith/Sunflower Invitational in Lawrence, Kan., at the Alvarado Golf and Country Club.

Going into Tuesday's play, the Wildcats were third, but could not maintain stamina, falling to fifth with a combined score of 967.

Freshman Kali Quick led the team with a score of 236 and a career-best fifth-place finish.

In a tournament the Wildcats won twice in previous years, fifth place is not good enough, Coach Kristi Knight said.

“When you're in third place, you're looking to move forward in the final round,” Knight said.

The Wildcats have competed on four courses this season where no player had seen or played on the course before, relying only on the practice round for experience.

Although the difficulties the team has faced are reassuring, Knight said the team is frustrated as a whole. Last fall, the Wildcats carded a first, second and two third-place finishes. This fall season, however, has not lived up to those team standards.

According to Knight, the biggest factor this season is the team has not finished strong in any one tournament.

“We used to struggle in the first round but finish strong,” Knight said. “With the talent and expectations this women's golf team has, we are not playing the way we know we can.”

Knight said, right now, the players' biggest battle is not on the course – it is in their heads. “We need something really good to happen to get the momentum going the other way – it is my job and theirs to turn things around,” Knight said.

With a two-week break, the Cats are looking for time to regroup.

Senior Stephanie Limoges said a schedule that involves so much traveling in so little time can be exhausting.

“It's going to be nice to have a couple days off, just to take your mind off golf,” Limoges said. “We're all hard workers, and in this down time, we're all going to pick individual things to work on.”

The Wildcats will compete in their final fall tournament on Nov. 1-2 at the Edwin/Watts Palmetto at Oak Point Golf Club in Kiawha, S.C.

Knight said this next tournament is on a course that brings back good memories for the returnees on the team. Hopefully, Knight said, this can work to the team's advantage, giving them the confidence boost they need.

“We're dealing with an issue of pride right now – once you've tasted success, like this team has, you have increased expectations,” Knight said. “This tournament could give us an opportunity to turn things around.”

CFB | No TV broadcast for Nebraska/K-State game

K-State football fans hoping to catch the Oct. 23 Nebraska game on television are out of luck.

The K-State Department of Athletics announced Wednesday the sold-out game at KSU Stadium will take place at 1:10 p.m. and will not be televised.

MLB | Schilling could be done for playoffs

Boston ace Curt Schilling might not be able to pitch Game 5 of the AL championship series Sunday and needs surgery on his injured right ankle.

Schilling, who led the major leagues with 21 wins, lasted just three innings and 58 pitches in Boston's 10-7 loss to the New York Yankees in Tuesday night's opener, allowing six runs, his poorest postseason performance since 1993. He had trouble with his balance and pushing off the rubber, which cut his velocity.

If Schilling can't pitch, he likely would be replaced in the Red Sox rotation by Derek Lowe, a starter all season who struggled down the stretch and has thrown just 12 pitches in relief in the playoffs.

Red Sox team physician Dr. Bill Morgan said before Wednesday's game that the sheath that covers two tendons in Schilling's ankle is torn, allowing one of the tendons to slip out of its groove and rub against a bone. Schilling didn't feel pain while pitching Tuesday because he had an injection of Marcaine, an anesthetic.

Schilling is to throw in the bullpen before Friday's third game. If he doesn't have more success, he probably wouldn't pitch again this year, even if the Red Sox reach the World Series, Morgan said.

NFL | Plummer agrees to remove Tillman sticker

Broncos quarterback Jake Plummer agreed Wednesday to stop wearing a sticker on his helmet in memory of an ex-teammate killed in the war in Afghanistan, and the NFL agreed to find other ways to honor the slain soldier.

Plummer faced heavy NFL fines for wearing the small No. 40 sticker on his helmet last Sunday in memory of Pat Tillman, who played with Plummer at Arizona State and on the Arizona Cardinals.

Tillman quit football to join the Army Rangers. In April, he was killed in combat in Afghanistan.

The NFL agreed to play public-service spots in stadiums on Veterans Day that Plummer will record on behalf of the Pat Tillman Foundation.

The Broncos agreed to put a No. 40 logo near the play clock in the north end zone at Invesco Field at Mile High and to run ads promoting the foundation on the scoreboard during games.

NASCAR | 15-year-old signs developmental deal

Next October, Chase Austin will finally be old enough to drive to the grocery store by himself.

By then, though, he'll also have a full season of stock car racing under his belt.

When Hendrick Motorsports signed the 15-year-old high school freshman from Eudora to a developmental contract last week, it raised the question: How young is too young?

Austin doesn't seem intimidated, although he acknowledges his is an unusual situation.

“I can see where people are coming from,” he said. “Sometimes I've thought I'm too young because there's so much involved with this. But if I saw some other 15-year-old have this chance, I'd want it, too.”

Austin does have an impressive racing resume that invites comparisons to the early years of Jeff Gordon's career.

Austin started racing go-karts when he was 8 — and by 13, just like Gordon, was competing in full-size sprint cars.

KACA exhibit gives local artists' work exposure

By Jessica Grant

Contorted statues, ceramic figures, reed and ceramic gourds and large bronze and steel statues are all parts of the current art exhibit at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The exhibit is for the Kansas Artist Craftsman Association and was also in conjunction with a conference held at the arts center last weekend.

"There are two art exhibits in one at the art center," Julie Gibbs, masters student in ceramics, said. "The first one was a call to professional artists for entries in three dimensional art; jewelry, metals, and ceramics, etc. For the second part, they sent out a call for students to submit their work."

Program and marketing director for the Center, Brady Miller, said every show at the center runs for six weeks and in order to have their work on display, people of groups must submit applications for shows.

When: Now until Oct. 30
Hours: 10 to 5 p.m. Mon.-Fri., 1 to 4 p.m. Sat., closed Sun.

"We would like to have more university students show their work here. I know that in order for students to graduate from K-State's art department, students have to do a show in Manhattan," Miller said.

Gibbs said the art work on display was selected by a set of jurors from the art community.

James Taylor, a K-State art student whose work has been selected two years in a row, said he entered upon the recommendation of professors.

"My professors really pushed this show heavily. Yoshi Ikeda and Anna Calluori Holcombe really pushed this show," Taylor said.

Taylor's ceramic work entitled "Uncensored Sacrifice" was created to make a statement.

"It has to do with censorship at K-State. At K-State I'm pushing the limits of what the university will accept. There's only so much that I can do here without people being upset," Taylor said.

Gibbs also had ceramic work selected for the show. Gibbs work consists of a series of ceramic women and boxes.

"To make these pieces, I used a construction technique for boxes that we teach here in ceramics one class. I used tar paper and fixed it to slabs of clay," Gibbs said.

Gibbs said she also wanted to start a dialogue about women triumphing over obstacles, not necessarily women as victims and the different roles of women in the art world.

Gibbs also stressed the importance of attending an unusual event.

"Because the focus is on arts and crafts together there is an element of history to this show. All the materials used have been used in the United States as craft materials. There is a deep history here that involves social context," Gibbs said.

9/11 report leads book awards nominations

The final report of the 9/11 Commission led the list of finalists for the National Book Awards announced Wednesday. The commission's report was among five finalists in the nonfiction category.

The authorized edition published by W. W. Norton has been praised as a compelling narrative and has sold well, too, with more than 1 million books in print.

Government reports have traditionally been considered bland and unreadable, so the inclusion is unusual if not unprecedented. In 1973, a report by a special commission in New York on a deadly riot at the state prison in Attica two years earlier was nominated but did not win.

Comic to feature HIV-positive sidekick

Along with fighting alien menaces and criminal masterminds, the "Green Arrow" comic book will now feature a sidekick engaged in a more personal struggle — one against HIV.

It's the first major comic book to deal with the illness, and a dose of hard-edged reality to the usually fanciful world of costumed crime fighters.

In the latest issue of "Green Arrow," a teenage runaway named Mia — who has been in the care of the title hero for two years — discovers that her time spent as a street-dweller and prostitute has resulted in her picking up the virus.

Writer Judd Winick, who oversees the "Green Arrow" story line, said this is a way to explore socially conscious themes while also giving the Mia character extra motivation to make a difference in the world.

Fox disagrees with FCC indecency finding

Fox Broadcasting Co. disagrees with a finding by federal regulators that an episode of "Married by America" was indecent, but isn't saying whether it will appeal a nearly $1.2 million fine.

The Federal Communications Commission said Tuesday that some of the material in the reality series, which featured male and female Las Vegas strippers in a variety of sexual situations, was indecent and patently offensive. The agency said it was designed to "pander to and titillate the audience."

FCC commissioners voted unanimously to fine each of the 169 Fox TV stations that aired the program $7,000. Fox has 30 days to appeal the fines, which total $1,183,000.

Nasty kitchen bacterium can be taken care of Welcome again my few, though loyal, readers.

It seems all too often nowadays we read about another poor schmuck carted off to the hospital to be treated for Salmonella poisoning more than 40,000 each year, according to the Centers for Disease Control's Web site.

This both displeases me and saddens me deeply because it is apparent there is rampant disregard of food preparation safety rules.

Thus, I have painstakingly compiled a brief biography of our friend Salmonella, and a list of basic sanitation tips you can either post on your refrigerator for quick reference, or leave in the care of a friend to wave in your face the next time you find yourself recovering from Salmonella poisoning.

What is Salmonella, you ask? To that I reply, "I'll tell you."

Salmonella is the nasty microbe that causes most cases of food poisoning. According to the CDC's Web site, a scientist named Salmon discovered this bacteria that causes, amongst other pleasant symptoms, fever, abdominal cramps and diarrhea (instead of my own last name I'd would have given it the name-sake of someone I wasn't very fond of, like Fox's Ann Coulter or Bill O'Reilly).

Salmonella bacterium is passed from organism to organism through fecal material, and the most common forms are Salmonella Typhimurium and Enteritidis.

These microscopic pranksters nest in your intestines, and symptoms last for approximately four to seven days, depending on the robustitude of your immune system.

Treatment, if needed, is with antibiotics like ampicillin, gentamicin and ciprofloxacin and most people recover easily.

A small number of serious cases require hospitalization and will go on to develop joint pain, eye irritation and painful urination.

This condition is known as Reiter's Syndrome and can last for months and even years. It can also lead to chronic arthritis.

Sound like fun? Well, if you don't have a toilet fetish or long to spend exorbitant amounts on prescription drugs, follow these tips when cooking, and your wallet and bowels will thank you.

1. FULLY COOK THE FOOD

Since Salmonella is transmitted through animal feces, and slaughterhouses might not be the most sterile of environments, fecal material can be spread all over the surface of your meat and you won't even know it.

Make sure that meat and eggs are fully cooked, especially ground beef (Salmonella tends to stay on the surface of steak and chicken, but is ground deep into hamburger, i.e. if it's pink inside, Salmonella might still be alive).

Make sure produce is washed before consuming.

2. DON'T CROSS-CONTAMINATE FOODS

Fortunately, Salmonella doesn't have an airborne strain, but it is important to keep uncooked meats away from produce and cooked food.

If your refrigerator has a separate meat compartment, store it there without falter.

If you don't have a separator, store uncooked meat on the lowest shelf possible or someplace where it can't drip on or into other foods.

3. ALWAYS WASH YOUR HANDS AFTER HANDLING RAW FOODS OR REPTILES

How many of you have heard of "Typhoid" Mary Mallon?

In case you haven't, she was a household cook around the turn of the century, and the first known carrier of Typhoid fever.

The common sanitarian views of illness at that time dictated that everything be kept as clean as possible, but since germ theory was still a relatively fledgling movement at that time, the thought was that if it looked clean, it was clean.

So Mallon didn't wash her hands, and because Typhoid fever is transmitted in the same manner as Salmonella (Salmonella Typhimurium) she infected over 40 people with a disease that has a ten percent death rate.

Reptiles are also carriers of Salmonella, and you should wash your hands after every handling.

4. IF YOU HAVE SALMONELLA, DON'T HANDLE OR SERVE FOOD FOR OBVIOUS REASONS

Anyone who obtains Salmonella through your own carelessness has automatic license to punch you in the throat.

I hope that this has been informative and fun for all of you. As long as you practice these common sense safety tips, you'll ne'er need to lose a single night's sleep to worry.

New Hobby Lobby store receives favorable response in first weeks

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

The parade of store grand openings continued Sept. 4 with the opening of Hobby Lobby on Tuttle Creek Blvd occupying the space between Staples and the newly relocated Hastings Book, Music and Video.

Jared Cullison, Hobby Lobby assistant manager, said the store's opening was a success.

"We have a lot to give to the community, a lot more than our competitors," Cullison said.

Overall, business is doing very well, he said.

"Manhattan really needed a store with our type of services," Cullison said.

Several customers agreed Manhattan had been lacking such a store.

"This store was long overdue," Mary Lou Roepke, Waterville resident, said. "I have always been into working on crafts, and a store like this is just what Manhattan needs."

Jenny Valan, junior in education, said she agreed.

"This town has had a limited selection with other competitors such as Ben Franklin and Jo-Ann Fabric and Crafts," Valan said. "I think Hobby Lobby is the answer."

Ben Franklin and Hobby Lobby are very similar, Jerry Humes, owner of Ben Franklin Crafts and Frame, said. "Right now, our business is experiencing a huge change with the competing store, but I think we can bounce back from that."

Lela Tehrani, junior in animal science, said she prefers the selection of Hobby Lobby over other stores.

"I just walk into the store, and although I intended to stay for 20 minutes, I know I will stay for an hour because there is so much here," Tehrani said.

But variety is not the only thing that makes Hobby Lobby competitive, Cullison said. The store also provides convenience.

"We are in a good location, so people do not have to travel far for the huge selection we have."

Jerry Humes said Hobby Lobby is not the only store that provides variety and convenience.

"We try to cater our store to the customers," Humes said. "Most of our products apply to a broad range of customers."

"If we don't have what you're looking for, we will get it."

Cullison said Hobby Lobby customers are happy they do not have to go to other towns such as Topeka or Salina to get their arts and crafts supplies.

Tehrani said she had to travel to many stores and towns to find the variety that Hobby Lobby offers in one central location.

"Now I can go to one store and get everything I want," she said.

Cullison also said the store is getting great response from the college population.

"I know that K-State students will keep this store alive," he said. "We appreciate the support from the university."

Humes said students in engineering tend to be the stronger supporter of their store.

"Our store works real close with those in architecture or engineering," he said. "We try to supply them with the products they need for studio, whether that be some wood or arts material."

Although students might shop at Ben Franklin for classroom supplies, students also use the store for extracurricular reasons, said Humes. "Those in Greek life purchase lots of items from our store, especially wooden paddles or scrap-booking material."

Humes said catering to the Greek students is always a treat.

"We like to host paddle parties, where greek students come and make paddles as we treat them to pizza and soda," Humes said. "We help them build tradition."

Special parties are not the only way Ben Franklin tries to reach to customers. Humes said the store tries to educate customers about products.

"Competing stores just supply the craft to the customer, we educate the customer on the product with our very experienced staff," he said. "Some of our employees have had over 15 years of experience with their specialized department.

"We also offer specialized classes for beginning and advanced craftsmen," he said.

Jo-Ann's Fabrics and Crafts merchandising team leader, Darlene Moorman, said Jo-Ann's tries to give special discounts for students in the area.

"Students enrolled in special quilting or drama classes are our heaviest customers, and we try treating them to a special discount," she said. "This is a way that we try to stay competitive."

Valan said, in addition to the convenience at Hobby Lobby, the store's low prices are also appreciated.

"The prices are pretty nice, especially for those on a college budget," Valan said. "My girlfriends and I really enjoy dropping in here."

Although most of the customers at Hobby Lobby are females, the store still provides products for people of either gender, Chris Miller, junior in mechanical engineering, said.

"Yes, chicks are always into crafts, but I think guys can enjoy the store too," he said.

Foundation benefits from record alumni donations

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGEIAN

More than $54.2 million in cash contributions were given to the KSU Foundation in 2003 by Kansas State University alumni and friends.

Gary Hellebust, president and CEO of KSU Foundation, said this has been the fifth straight year of record contributions to K-State.

According to the Foundation, K-State ranks No. 1 nationally in terms of alumni giving back.

"We have 32 percent of alums giving back each year, which is very generous," Hellebust said. "We are very lucky to have such dedicated alumni that are so eager to give back to the school."

There is $16.7 million in

Did you know?

K-State donors

■ K-State has recorded 33,754 donors out of the 105,470 alumni during last year.

■ K-State has been ranked among the top 10 in alumni participation.

■ This has been the first year the school has been ranked No. 1 nationwide, with 32 percent support.

pledges and bequests, combined with $54.2 million in cash gifts, which pushed the total donation for this year to $70.9 million, Hellebust said.

This is the second best year for the Foundation since its beginning 60 years ago.

Most of the money given to the school was earned through endowment.

The KSU Foundation Tele-

fund, one of the main parts to K-State's alumni support, is also the world's largest all-volunteer telephone campaign for higher education.

More than 20,000 alumni and 1,500 student callers were responsible for the great success. The 2004 Telefund gained $1.6 million to add to the contributions.

"It is very surprising that we are still doing so well even after the stock market has had two of the most horrendous years," Hellebust said.

Hellebust said that this large amount of contribution will open up a lot of opportunities for both students and faculty members on campus.

In 2004, three faculty chairs and 94 new scholarships were established because of the record contributions.

control over his facial expressions," she said.

However, Dan Kuester, instructor of economics, said Bush seemed to use the same answers for multiple questions.

"When he first brought up the education question it was about job loss, and I thought it was a good answer. But, he just kept going back to it," he said.

While voting, lost jobs and illegal immigrants numbers were thrown around, Kerry used them more effectively, said Jennifer Labrie, graduate student in speech communication.

"He used a lot of statistics from Arizona and key states like Ohio, which captured those audiences in swing states," she said.

At the end of the 90-minute debate, both candidates described a safer, more optimistic America. However, Kerry never asked for votes.

"He went for every reason why you should choose him," Amelia Roudebush, senior in mass communications, said. "But he never flat out said, 'vote for me.' I think he missed a crucial point."

introduced to DJ Talz out here, and he's gotten me a few shows."

Merck had his first show at PJ's in February and is also performing in other clubs around the Midwest.

"I've performed in mainly the Kansas area, but I did go back home to Philadelphia and did a show there," Merck said. "This will be my third show at PJ's."

Travis "Trapper" Edwards is the booking agent and sound man at PJ's and said they get a lot of good performers from not only Kansas but other places in the Midwest.

"Prodigy has come in from Kansas City," Edwards said. "We've also gotten a few performers from St. Louis in here. We have a lot of performers trying to get in here, we've been pretty full so far."

Edwards said the response from the crowd has been very good.

"There are a lot of people who have never been exposed to live rap music who are coming out to the shows," Edwards said. "They are getting a new experience and something unexpected from the shows. So far we've gotten a really good response from the crowds on Saturdays."

match got away from us," Fritz said. "We had plenty of opportunities to be right in there and didn't take advantage of that."

But for Fritz and the Wildcats, who have now lost two straight at home after last Saturday's defeat to Texas, there were some positives to take away from the defeat.

"We were better tonight than we were last Saturday," Fritz said. "We gave better effort. We worked really, really hard and that's something we talked about. We can't let anybody outwork us, and I didn't feel like that happened tonight."

Senior setter Gabby Guerre led K-State in a losing effort, finishing three kills shy of a triple-double with 45 assists, 13 digs and seven kills. Sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner led the Cats with 14 kills, and senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas added 12.

The Huskers, the No. 1 blocking team in the Big 12, had 24 blocks while holding K-State to a .192 hitting percentage.

Hejjas said it was difficult to continue hitting with confidence against Nebraska.

"You can't lose your confidence," Hejjas said. "You need to stay aggressive and find your shots and not make errors, and that's hard to do against good blocking teams."

Hejjas said the Wildcats have already corrected at least one of the contributing factors to their last two losses.

"One of the problems we had against Texas was we felt like they outworked us," Hejjas said. "Tonight, I don't think that was so."

program for uninsured children ages 6-23 months or uninsured children up to age 18 years who have chronic medical conditions," Susanne Kufahl, assistant administrator, said.

The Centers for Disease Control has prioritized any available vaccines for high-risk patients, which the center has counted at 98 million Americans.

Those people include babies and toddlers ages 6-23 months; anyone 65 or older; anyone with chronic medical conditions such as heart or lung disease; pregnant women; residents of long-term care facilities; children on chronic aspirin therapy; health workers who care for high-risk patients; and caregivers and household contacts of babies under six months.

Jeff Chapman
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

caused by the shortage, the CDC and Aventis Pasteur announced Tuesday a plan to redistribute the company's remaining shots directly to pediatricians, nursing homes and other places that care for high-risk patients.

Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community officials are remaining hopeful despite not yet receiving any vaccines.

"It's our understanding that the CDC, the one that controls the dissemination, has named anyone over 65 and health care workers as those listed in the priority category of those who receive the first available doses," Jeff Chapman, director of public relations, said.

Chapman said residents are not usually vaccinated until early November because the most dangerous months of flu seasons are December through March.

"At this time there is no panic," he said. "We are waiting for more information. We certainly hopeful it will be available and will come to us as a priority."

Voter registration cards due by Monday

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only a few days remain before the voting registration deadline.

Registration cards are due by 5 p.m. Monday at the Riley County clerk's office.

People can register at the various locations around Manhattan as well as at the Riley County Web site.

"The easiest way for students to access the Riley County Web site and print it off and sign or bring it in," Rich Vargo, county clerk, said.

Because the deadline is approaching, Vargo said it would best to drop off the registration form at 110 Courthouse Plaza.

Student Senate members have been passing out registration forms for the past two weeks, collecting 200 cards. Matt King, governmental relations chair, said there has been a booth in the K-State Student Union, as well as volunteers visiting living organizations and campus meetings.

"We haven't had them all turned back in yet," King said.

The registration cards will be taken to the Riley County courthouse today.

King said some of Student Governing Association's registration effort has been limited because many students have already participated in other registration drives.

"I think we are catching the slack at the last minute," he said.

Vargo said although registering is an important step, voters must also participate. Absentee balloting began earlier this week and continues through Nov. 1 at the clerk's office.

"They can come in and participate in the advance voting process after they register," he said.

King said SGA will continue with an absentee voting drive in the days before the election.

"We are going to have booths in the Union, and people are going to living organizations," he said. "We've already got more ballots than registration cards."

But whether you vote Nov. 2 or in the next two weeks, everyone must vote, King said.

"It's our civic duty, and we have to have our voices heard," he said. "In order to be able to voice and disagree you should have voted."

"You need to vote in order to criticize. It's a fundamental right. If you don't partake in that, then I don't want to hear it."

Don't forget Voter registration

What: The deadline to register to vote in the Nov. 2 election is 5 p.m. Monday.

Local 4-H Clubs participate in National Meat Judging Contest

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members representing 15 different 4-H Clubs from 15 different states participated in the National Meat Judging Contest on Thursday in Weber Hall.

This is the eleventh year the competition has been hosted by K-State, host contest coordinator Dave Schafer said.

"The contest used to be in Kansas City with the American Royal, but they no longer have a place to hold it," he said.

More than 50 contestants, aged 14 to 18, contestants judged the food in different categories including species, wholesale cut, retail cut, type of cut and cooking method.

Contestants had to grade the meat based on quality and then rate it from one to four, four being the best.

After rating the meat, the contestants had to explain why they chose that rating to a panel of judges.

Schafer said not many states are represented because some states don't have the facilities or the leadership to teach it.

"It is one of the more challenging of the 4-H activities," he said.

Robbie McKinnon, coach of the Pike County, Ark., team said it takes a lot of time and work for the contestants get to the national level.

"To get a team ready for a national contest, you should practice about 60 times or more," she said.

Dozens of soldiers to face prison abuse charges

By John L. Lumpkin
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Up to 28 U.S. soldiers face possible criminal charges in connection with the deaths of two prisoners at an American-run prison in Afghanistan two years ago, the Army announced Thursday.

The most serious potential charges include involuntary manslaughter and maiming, the Army said in a statement.

Its announcement marked completion of a nearly 2-year-old investigation into the deaths. The Army's Criminal Investigation Division recommends various charges against the 28, with some facing more serious charges than others.

So far, only one person, a military police reservist, has actually been charged in connection with the deaths. Sgt.

E-mail security deadline is Monday

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Monday is the deadline for students to respond to secure connectivity.

It is a feature of Webmail that ensures secure passwords and is now being extended to other popular e-mail clients.

This feature is existent on Webmail but mandatory for other e-mail clients supported by the university, said Julie Bell, Unix System Manager at Computing and Network Services.

Bell said enabling secure connectivity made e-mails more secure and prevented password sniffing.

People who did not update to this connectivity would be unable to retrieve mail from the central servers, she added.

Bell said secure connectivity increased the level of user protection.

"Enabling SSL on your email clients such as Mozilla, Netscape, Pegasus provides an added level of privacy and security for the data you are sending over the network," she said.

Bell said only passwords are being encrypted now, but plans are under discussion for encrypting the entire message.

BEST BETS

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

1 | PUPPET PLAY

Not since Punch and Judy have puppets caused so much controversy.

The creators of "South Park" will pull out all the stops (and perhaps a few marionette strings) when "Team America" opens in theaters today. The movie pokes fun at such personalities as husband and wife team Tim Robbins and Susan Sarandon, filmmaker Michael Moore, and presidential candidates George W. Bush and John Kerry.

If you're too cheap to shell out the $7 for the movie, creating your own sock puppet theater is always an option as well. Who knows? Trey Parker and Matt Stone just might make it into a film.

2 | WILDCAT COMEBACK?

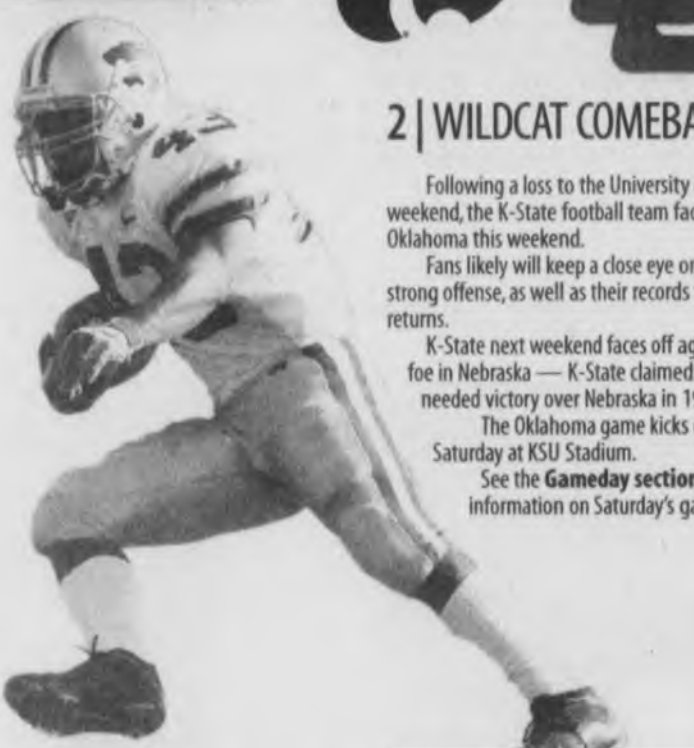

Following a loss to the University of Kansas last weekend, the K-State football team faces off against Oklahoma this weekend.

Fans likely will keep a close eye on Oklahoma's strong offense, as well as their records for punts and returns.

K-State next weekend faces off against an old foe in Nebraska — K-State claimed a long-needed victory over Nebraska in 1998.

The Oklahoma game kicks off at 11 a.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

See the Gameday section for more information on Saturday's game.

3 | LAUGHING ALL THE WAY TO THE WAREHAM

Manhattan will welcome comics from a nationally recognized television station when Black Entertainment Television brings five comics to town.

The event will take place both tonight and Saturday at the Wareham Opera House and will include dinner and a dance. Comics slated to perform include BET's Vince D and Hurricane Andrew.

Tickets for the event can be purchased at the opera house.

4 | MEAN GIRLS NEED GROCERIES, TOO

Forget about that Ramen that's been sitting in your cupboard for six months. Let the Union Program Council feed you during its After Hours event this weekend.

UPC's After Hours will kick off at 9 tonight with grocery bingo, a spinoff of bingo in which players can win groceries and even a DVD player. If you're just too hungry and can't wait to buy those groceries, snack on some free nachos in the Union Courtyard starting at 10 p.m.

Take a trip back to high school at midnight in Forum Hall with a screening of "Mean Girls." The teenage comedy, starring Lindsey Lohan, matches the new kid in school with the school's most popular, snobby girls in a twisted game of survival of the fittest. And you thought your high school experience was hell.

All After Hours events are free and open to the public.

Editor touts community coverage

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN
Susan Edgerley, metropolitan editor of The New York Times, speaks at the fifth annual Huck Boyd Lecture on Thursday. Edgerley, a K-State alumna, talked about her experience at the Times and the important of focusing on community news.

Susan Edgerley speaks at annual Huck Boyd lecture

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although The New York Times is sold in newsstands all across the nation, the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks emphasized its community focus.

Susan Edgerley, Times metropolitan editor and 1976 K-State graduate, said the attacks highlighted the importance of the newspaper's New York readers.

"The Trade Center bombing affected all of us and each of us. For us, it was local," she said. There's a portion of our 9/11 reporting that speaks intimately to the community."

Edgerley was speaking Thursday as part of the Huck Boyd lecture series, which highlights the importance of community media.

Some of the coverage that earned the Times seven Pulitzer prizes included an analysis of the 102 minutes between the time the first plane hit the Trade Center and the time the last tower collapsed.

"I remember awful stories in those first days of the attack when we found out the city had ordered 6,000 body bags," she said.

When Edgerley found out there would be no list of the dead from the police department, the metro desk began writing short profiles about the people listed on posters on lamp posts and fences of Greenwich Village. The official death toll is now at 2,749.

"The New York Times became a hometown newspaper," she said.

Although the stories of Sept.

11 have now been told, there are still stories from the New York community to tell every day.

"It's being more vital for more impact because you know your community better," Edgerley said.

And to know that community better means listening to readers, she said.

"I try to listen more closely to readers' complaints," she said. "It's not about weakness, cowering or pacifying someone. It's about getting it right."

With the New York community being so diverse, Edgerley said she tries to cater to all kinds of people.

"I want the metro section to have a sense of humor," she said. "I think the reader is someone I want to delight every day with something important or amusing."

TO THE POINT Don't miss deadline to register to vote

You might be skilled at getting an extension from your professor for important assignments.

But there is a deadline approaching that you can't extend.

Time is ticking for you to have an opportunity to vote.

The last general election proved the importance of each and every vote.

In local elections with issues that directly affect your daily life, the margins which decide the issues are even smaller.

And you can't vote if you don't register, so you must register. The Riley County clerk's office is trying to make it as easy as possible to ensure you have a voice in your local, state and national governments.

They have a Web site, www.riley-countyks.gov/clerk/elections.asp, which offers easy-to-follow, detailed instructions on how to register.

The deadline to register to vote in the Nov. 2 election is 5 p.m. Monday.

This is one deadline Americans can't afford to miss.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

A lasting impression

Opinion editor excelled as a student, journalist and friend

I hope Barbara would approve of the way I'm beginning my column; she usually made me rewrite this part.

I first met Barbara a little more than a year ago, in an honors class. It was one of many for her. She was a 4.0 student, graduating in three years.

During the past year, Barbara was my classmate, then my friend, then my boss but still my friend.

I hadn't known her long before it became clear that our political views were quite different. Our political conversations usually consisted of polite disagreements.

But I came to realize that our ideas were not really all that different, even though the way we thought they should be implemented was.

Barbara e-mailed me in response to a column I wrote a couple of weeks ago. "Fabulous," she wrote. "It makes me sad that you're a Republican."

Even though she was the president of the Young Democrats and a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, I heard her criticize politicians on both sides of the aisle if she thought their words or their actions were out of line.

Barbara did her best to make sure that the Opinion page was unbiased, choosing equal numbers of self-described liberals and conservatives.

If she felt that any of her columnists were being criticized unfairly, she fought for them. Pity the uninformed critic.

She stood up for me, even though she didn't always agree with me, and for other columnists, whether they were liberal or conservative. It made me more confident to know that my editor would back me up.

Last week, I was talking to another columnist who had just received a harsh, irrational e-mail criticizing her column. Barbara replied, defending the columnist and making it clear that baseless attacks were not welcomed. The columnist's response was, "Way to go, Barbara!"

Barbara held us all to a high standard, trying to make sure that the Opinion page was the best she could make it, and I, for one, am a better writer for it.

She was always encouraging, even when she wanted me to rewrite practically half of a column. "It's really good. If you'll just make a few changes..."

She even managed to clean up the Fourum, a task the rest of the staff was more than willing to leave to her.

Barbara planned to graduate this year, and had already taken the LSAT in preparation for going to law school. I would not have liked to argue a case against her.

She loved her family and her fiancé. She constantly talked about her niece, whom she enjoyed babysitting. She planned to get married next summer. The dresses were already picked out. Barbara did not waste the time she spent with us; she accomplished much more than have many people twice her age.

As her mother said, "There aren't many 20-year-olds who have been on four continents, but Barb was."

She lived out the expression "carpe diem." Barbara truly knew how to seize the day.

Many of you may remember the set of clash columns Barbara and James Hurla wrote last semester, arguing about whether Jesus would have been a Republican or a Democrat. Barbara, of course, argued that he would be a Democrat.

As her mother pointed out, now she'll know.

MONDAY'S OPINIONS

JEREMY PARKER
Jeremy Parker examines the perceived political agenda of the Sinclair broadcast group.

JONAS HOGG
Jonas Hogg urges closer consideration of the issues as the election approaches.

City council campaign a real drag

I don't know about most of you, but drag queens fascinate me. I think they are probably some of the most beautiful "women" I have ever seen.

Let's face it, girls: They can walk in heels without falling down or tripping, they exude more confidence than any 10 of us normal gals, and their skills at putting on make-up rival those of a Hollywood make-up artist.

Drag queens can teach us regular girls a thing or two. If not only about beauty tips, but also about the importance self-confidence and believing in yourself.

That's why I am happy to announce that Flo, Kansas City's most famous drag queen, is stepping out of the pink spotlight and into the political arena.

Last Friday, Flo (aka John Koop) declared his/her intentions to run for city council in the 4th District of Kansas City, Mo.

I know what you are thinking. Is it likely that a drag queen has a chance at an election in the most central and/or conservative of Midwestern cities? Flo certainly seems to think so.

"I live in the 4th District. How many gay people and liberals live in the 4th District? Everybody!" Flo said in The Kansas City Star last Friday.

Flo even said he was excited to stir things up a bit, perhaps by showing up to council meetings in drag. Now that takes guts.

I'm pretty sure people in Kansas City are going to be up in arms about this. A man is going to put on make-up and a dress and try to involve himself in the political process? How absurd!

Let's be honest for a moment. How is Flo dressing up, in all his/her transgendered glory, different than President Bush putting on an airman's uniform to talk to troops, or when he comes to the Midwest and wears cowboy hats?

Bush wears an airman's uniform so he can try and form a small connection with those men and women who serve our country? Yes, he served as a member of the Texas Air National Guard.

But don't you think, as an airman, you would be insulted that a man thinks he can put on the same uniform as you and somehow be on your level? These men and women who fly over dangerous air space in Iraq... is that the same as running a flight modulator in Houston, Texas?

Or take the cowboy hat. I know

Bush is from Texas. If there is any one piece of clothing a Texan is proud of, it is his hat. But you don't see Bush sporting that hat around Washington. Suspiciously, he has photo ops with it in the Midwest.

Are we as Midwesterners supposed to just assimilate him into our culture because he throws on a Stetson? I'm pretty sure that at Yale, during Skull and Bones meetings, Bush didn't wear the hat. He probably only keeps it at his house in Texas.

Aren't all politicians just dressing up to play a part? At least Flo is honest about who he/she is. Flo is proud to be gay, a drag queen, and certainly proud enough of his community to represent them.

I just find it refreshing to see someone put honesty back in politics.

To the guy who didn't give me the ticket: Thank you, you're my hero. Not all parking guys are mean.

I myself dabbled in pacifism once. Not in 'Nam, of course.

Does anyone else find it ironic that Election Day is the same day as Day of the Dead?

Alan Webb sucks at life.

I feel sorry for people who don't drink, because when they wake up in the morning, that's as good as they're going to feel all day.

Yeah, so we're at the Union parking lot, and it's 4:30. Where's the tailgate, huh? You liars.

Here's a drinking game to play during the pres. debates. Everytime John Kerry says I've got a plan, drink. You'll be drunk in no time.

To all bicyclists at K-State, including the one I almost hit today, you're considered a motor vehicle. Learn the rules of the road or next time I'll run you over.

I think everybody should go to volleyball matches because they're just like football games, except we actually win.

Don't be a fairweather fan. I say we all wear purple this week every day to show our football team we still believe in them. Go Cats!

I go into the library at 3, and it's full. I leave the library at 5, and it's winter. I hate Kansas.

Pres. Bush and VP Cheney are both former Texas oil men who still have financial ties to the industry. The price of oil and gasoline have reached an all-time high. What a coincidence.

My dog is cool. His name is Duke.

Kansas State football sucks.

Dear God, please make K-State quit sucking at football. Amen.

Goodbye, Barbara. I've known you since high school, but I'm never going to forget you. Bye.

I think John Kerry just said he was a lesbian.

Stupid K-State Internet monkeys.

Is there supposed to be a seal on the smoke detectors in residence halls?

Truckers suck.

Now KU has better football and basketball teams. Now I'm definitely switching to KU.

Did anybody see the sign that says 'John Kerry eats babies'?

I just finished watching the presidential debates and my roommate turned to me and said, 'Why do they call him Kerry Edwards if his name is John Kerry?'

To all the fair-weather K-State football fans, this weekend is your chance to prove you're loyal to the colors.

Isn't it sad that we have tuba players in the band that are bigger and more athletic than the guys on the football team?

Masturbation is perfectly justified. It's just me having sex with someone I really love.

Yeah, the QSA is obviously making up at least half of those names on the sidewalk in the Quad.

To quote Eric Cartman, home school kids have the personality of a wet dish cloth.

Kansas has its hickish reputation because of you close-minded Bush lovers.

I'd have a lot more respect for you guys if you would admit you're too stubborn to vote anything but Republican. If you say Bush has actually done a good job, I have no respect for you.

Yes, it's October and my Christmas lights are up. Have you ever tried putting up lights in December, 20 below zero?

You know, Mary, home school is really just for the poor and the ugly.

To the guy who used the word hick: how can you be happy if you're so prejudiced?

My roommate just told me he likes to wear his fiancée's underwear because it makes him feel sexy.

Patrice Holderbach — you are my Hindu goddess.

If President Bush is so religious, why does he rarely go to church? Presidents Carter and Clinton regularly attended church when they were in office.

Foundation signs pop up on campus

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The signs are back for the second year in a row.

Lining the sidewalks near most campus buildings are 362 signs for the Time, Talent and Treasures campaign which started Thursday and ends today.

The signs are filled with statistics and statements to inform students how they do and can benefit from private donations given to K-State, TTT Chairperson Joel Whitworth said.

He said private donations contribute to activities and projects on campus. Funding does not all come from tuition and state funding.

"We have great private support to do things that we wouldn't otherwise be able to do," he said.

"Without private support, we could not do the things we do."

TTT is part of KSU Student Foundation, which is the student organization of the KSU Foundation.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Jimmy Kummer, senior in electrical engineering, puts up Time, Talent and Treasures signs outside of Eisenhower Hall. The 362 signs are used to inform students about how they benefit from private donations.

The signs tell students private money has given renovations to certain buildings, or something similar to "if every graduate donates $1, Hale Library could stay open longer and purchase more subscriptions, books and special services for students."

Whitworth said the Foundation would like all students to donate whatever amount they can.

"You don't have to donate a large amount," he said. "If every student gives back a little bit, it adds up to a large amount."

"If 100 people give $40, that's $4,000 right there."

Every fall TTT does the sign campaign, Whitworth said, and in the spring there is another project. Last spring, TTT handed out yellow cups.

Since the campaigns are new, he said they are unsure how much the signs have encouraged students to donate.

"It's definitely good to get awareness," Whitworth said.

Jimmy Kummer, president of the Student Foundation, said he thought it was too soon to tell if the signs have helped.

"It is kind of difficult to tell," he said. "But, I think if over the years the alumni contributions continue to grow, then we can say it has helped."

Kummer said he thinks it is important for the contributions to grow, because it costs more to go to school than it used to.

"With the continued problem with funding in our state, it is becoming more and more important to donate to K-State," he said.

"That money has to come from somewhere. Our cost keeps on going up, but our funding keeps going down."

BET comedians to entertain locally

By Corbin H. Crable
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Black Entertainment Television comes to Manhattan this weekend for two nights of comedy performances by BET's rising stars.

Sponsored by Junction City-based CCB Productions, the traveling event, which will take place at 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Wareham Opera House, is designed to be an evening of relaxation and fun, said Carter Oliver, co-founder of CCB Productions.

He said the lineup of the event includes a dance with Fort Riley-based DJ Chris Monroe, various giveaways, a buffet-style dinner, and stand-up acts by such BET comedians as Vince D, Hurricane Andrew and Pervis Powell. Oliver himself also will perform, and all comics will sign autographs at the end of the evening.

In years past, the event has only taken place on one night; Oliver said he expects both performances to sell out. "It's running two days because of high demand," Oliver said. "We've turned too many people away. These aren't club comics."

Although K-State won't be represented onstage this weekend, the audience is sure to enjoy each comic's performance, said Brenda Arveson, co-founder of CCB Productions.

"Even though some of them are big, they don't act like they're above the next comic. They're down-to-earth, friendly people," Arveson said.

Oliver said the performances serve as a good chance for those who want to get into entertainment to network with BET's performers.

Arveson said that ultimately, she hopes the evening is memorable for all who attend.

"You'll get a friendly atmosphere, a great show and a lot of laughs in a comfortable setting," she said.

Volleyball team travels to Lubbock Saturday

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team is seeking to turn the tide this Saturday at Texas Tech after back-to-back conference losses.

The No. 16 Wildcats, 11-6 overall, 3-5 in the Big 12 Conference, are coming off of home defeats to top-10 teams Texas and Nebraska. They now go against a Red Raider squad that is 7-7 on the season and 3-5 in the Big 12. K-State has won five in a row against Texas Tech, including a 3-0 win last year in Lubbock, Texas.

The Red Raiders, coming off a road win Wednesday at Baylor, feature outside hitter Kelly Johnson, who averages 3.88 kills per game, setter Laura Grote, averaging 8.67 assists per game and middle blocker Brianna Florus, who adds 1.25 blocks per game.

Coach Suzie Fritz said her team did show signs of life in its loss to Nebraska and expects them to continue to work hard Saturday against Texas Tech.

"We were better than we were last Saturday," Fritz said. "We gave better effort. We worked really, really hard, and that's something we talked about. We can't let anybody outwork us, and I didn't feel like that happened."

One area of concern raised in the Nebraska game was K-State's difficulties defending against tips. Several times throughout the match, the Huskers were in position to put down a hit and then dink the ball over the Wildcat blockers for a point.

Fritz said the team must do a better job of defending those tips.

"We're not good at it," Fritz said. "You're sitting back there waiting for them to take a swing, and all of a sudden you have to go pursue a ball eight feet in front of you. It's not easy to do, but we didn't do it well at all."

But there were several positives to take away from the Nebraska loss, as well, Fritz said.

"I thought we served very well. I thought we passed particularly well, I thought (senior setter) Gabby Guerre's location was very good," Fritz said. "I thought we did a lot of things well."

K-State's Agata Rezende dives down to make a save during the first game of its match against the University of Nebraska on Wednesday evening at Ahearn Field House. Rezende had nine kills during the game against the Huskers.

MLB | Schilling out for possible Game 5

Boston ace Curt Schilling will not start Game 5 of the AL championship series Sunday because of an injured right ankle, though it's possible Schilling could return later in the series.

Derek Lowe will start in his place — unless the schedule is pushed back by rain that is forecast for Game 3 on Friday night. The New York Yankees lead the Red Sox 2-0 in the best-of-seven series.

"We need to get to Game 5," Boston manager Terry Francona said, "but, yeah, it's Derek."

Schilling, who led the major leagues with 21 wins, lasted just three innings and 58 pitches while allowing six runs in Boston's 10-7 loss to the Yankees in Tuesday night's opener. It was his poorest postseason performance since 1993.

"This team wasn't built around one player. We're fine," Boston first baseman Kevin Millar said. "This is where heroes are made."

Schilling said he had trouble with his balance and pushing off the pitching rubber, which cut his down on his pitch speed.

NBA | Yao the star in NBA's first game in China

Yao Ming was the star in the NBA's first China game, scoring 14 points and grabbing seven rebounds to lead the Houston Rockets past the Sacramento Kings 88-86 Thursday.

There was a capacity crowd on hand at Shanghai's city gymnasium to cheer the 7-foot-6 center, whose return has dominated headlines in his hometown. The crowd chanted Yao's name repeatedly — even when he wasn't on the court.

However, he missed his first two shots and was shaky defensively at the start.

His first points came on a dunk 7 minutes into the game, and he brought the fans to their feet when he scored on an alley-oop pass from Tracy McGrady in the second quarter.

NFL | Rice likely headed out of Oakland

Jerry Rice is tired of being fourth, fifth or even sixth fiddle behind the Oakland Raiders' talented young receivers — and he wants out.

Rice asked the Raiders to trade him if he's no longer going to have a significant role, and he met with owner Al Davis on Wednesday night to discuss his options.

The last time Davis met with a receiver was during training camp, and Tim Brown was released the next day after refusing to accept a greatly diminished role with the Raiders.

Rice is making $1.35 million in base salary this season. He spent Wednesday — his 42nd birthday — defending his ability to catch passes yet again.

MLB | Furcal pleads guilty to second DUI charge

Atlanta Braves shortstop Rafael Furcal, who is serving a 21-day jail sentence for being arrested while on probation, pleaded guilty Thursday to his second drunken driving charge.

Furcal's latest sentence will run concurrently with the remaining 19 days of his current jail term in Cobb County. He entered jail Tuesday, the day after the Braves lost their division series to the Houston Astros.

After his release from jail Nov. 1, Furcal also must enter in-house alcohol treatment, serve about 10 months of probation, complete 240 hours of community service and attend a 20-hour course about drunken driving.

The judge ruled that Furcal can return home to the Dominican Republic from Dec. 24-Jan. 2 to renew his passport.

Furcal, 26, was arrested Sept. 10 in Atlanta and charged with driving under the influence, his second such offense in four years.

Beware of force of sports

KENT HILDEBRAND

We've all seen what happens when the world of sports collides with the forces of nature.

There have been many sporting events postponed or cancelled due to natural phenomenon. Just this fall, several college football games had to be rescheduled because of hurricanes along the Southeast coast.

And perhaps one of the most memorable instances of natural forces affecting sports was Game Three of the 1989 World Series between the Oakland Athletics and the San Francisco Giants, when an earthquake measuring 7.1 on the Richter Scale rocked Candlestick Park during pre-game warmups.

The quake demolished 100,000 buildings, killed 67 people and postponed the Series for 10 days.

Those are all examples of nature acting on sports. But what happens when the roles are reversed?

This past Tuesday the Seattle Storm won the WNBA Championship, beating the Connecticut Sun 74-60. It was Seattle's first major sports championship in 25 years.

In other national news, on Wednesday, government scientists said lava was beginning to ooze from Mount St. Helens, an active volcano in Washington state. The U.S. Geological Survey has the volcano rated at its second-highest setting of "heightened activity," meaning there's a possibility the volcano could erupt again, as it did in 1980. But scientists say if it does erupt, it won't be as severe as the 1980 blast that killed 57 people and destroyed more than 200 homes.

At least that's what they hope.

These two events seem unrelated — or so you would be led to believe.

Rewind back to May 18, 1980, the date of Mount St. Helens' last eruption. Not even a year prior, Washington state's own Seattle Supersonics won the NBA title in 1979.

Let's see — Seattle sports team wins world title, local volcano erupts.

Now, 25 years later, the Space Needle City has once again captured a sports championship and — cue the eerie music — Mount St. Helens just happens to start spewing molten rock.

Coincidence? I think not.

The scoffers out there would discard the obvious connection between Seattle championships and mountains spontaneously blowing up as mere conspiracy theory. But as discerning sports fans, we know better. What we have here is a classic case of sports dictating major geological events.

Look at that cold, hard facts. Volcanic eruptions are relatively rare, as are Seattle sports championships. It just makes sense that whenever one comes around every quarter century or so, the other would follow close behind.

Voss leads way for water ski club in preparation for nationals

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The eyes of the K-State water ski club are set on nationals.

After capturing second place at the Great Plains Conference tournament Sept. 24-26 in Decatur, Ill., and taking fourth at the Midwest Regional Oct. 1-3 in Willington, Ill., the team earned the right to compete in the National Collegiate Championship in Zachary, La., which started Thursday and run through Saturday.

At the conference tournament, senior Julie Voss, president of the club, not only skied a personal best, but also set a record for the best performance in women's slalom.

She was competing against 115 women from 29 teams, and won the title with three and one-half buoys at 32 feet off the line.

Senior Jeremy Kruse said the dual conference was the most enjoyable tournament and the largest of its kind.

"I am so happy for Julie's records. I know she has really worked hard, and she has total respect from all the teams we compete against," Kruse said.

The conference tournament, hosted by Midwest Collegiate Water Ski, held 1,020 pulls on two lakes in two days.

As the team made its way to the Midwest Regional tournament, it had to ski their best, as only the top five teams advance to nationals.

The water ski club did not make its first appearance at Nationals until 2001. This fall will mark its fourth appearance.

Junior Kristin Stang said the team can't wait to go to nationals again.

"It is amazing to see how good other teams across the nation can be. It really makes you want to go home and work so that you can come back and beat them next year," Stang said.

Stang said she loves the club because of the support team members provide.

"It is challenging because you compete individually. If you screw up, it's your own fault and you can't blame other teammates for your mistakes. However, I love it because everyone is so supportive of everyone else, and we really care about people improving individually, as well as improving as a team," she said.

Cross country teams prepare for weekend tourney

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's and women's cross country teams will go up against the toughest competition they have faced all year when they travel to Fayetteville, Ark., Saturday for the Chile Pepper Invitational.

The meet will have the largest field of competitors the Wildcats have raced against this season, with 35 teams expected on the men's side and 38 on the women's side.

Coach Michael Smith said the increased competition will test his team.

"It will be a very competitive meet," Smith said. "The field will be the biggest that we've seen all year. For both the men and the women, the teams there will be very competitive."

Senior Mathew Chesang, after being involved in a car accident a few weeks ago, will again be held from racing. Chesang suffered whiplash and a slight knee injury as a result of the crash.

Smith said Chesang's injuries slowed his progress, so he will continue training instead of racing.

"When he started running again, he was favoring the knee, so his foot was giving him problems," Smith said. "Biomechanical issues erupted, and he's two weeks away from being where he was when he got in the accident. He's getting more out of training than he would racing."

Senior Trevor Smith said the team has responded well to the absence of Chesang, the

"Taxi"

★★★★☆

Movie review by Christopher Harrop

Queen Latifah is bold and brassy. Jimmy Fallon can't act his way out of a paper bag.

Hollywood executives and writers can't resist the allure of remaking and destroying a decent foreign film by mucking it up with supermodels and lame humor.

Nope, not much has changed in Hollywoodland after seeing "Taxi," director Tim Story's followup to the nicely done "Barbershop."

Andy Washburn (Fallon, "Saturday Night Live") is a bumbling New York City cop who's a far cry from Joe Friday. Washburn gets his driver's license revoked after a series of silly traffic violations.

Enter the recently crowned matriarch of female film comedy, Queen Latifah, as Belle, a tough-talking cab owner whose souped-up taxi comes to serve as Washburn's vehicle of choice while on the trail of criminals.

The criminals in question just happen to be a troupe of bank-robbing Brazilian supermodels led by Vanessa (Gisele Bunchen).

Little more information is needed about this cinematic dud. The film tries to be a buddy film, but the camera attention given to the poor-quality, high-speed car chases (Think "Starsky and Hutch" — the movie, not the show) and the scantily-clad villains.

If you've watched Fallon on "SNL" in the past few years, you know what to expect. He epically manages to not laugh at himself constantly, but it is painfully obvious Fallon is acting out a scene.

Queen Latifah does an admirable job in the role of Belle, but it's sad to see an actress with some degree of talent waste her efforts on such a poor production.

Queen quickly has become the female version of Christopher Walken by virtue of accepting roles in both very good films ("Chicago," "Brown Sugar") and horrifically bad flicks such as "Taxi."

If there is one bright spot on the film, it's the joy of seeing one of Sweden's all-time greats — Ann-Margret — portraying Washburn's mother, but even this semi-cameo appearance isn't enough to elevate this film to being bearable.

Overall, this film is enough to hope Andy Kaufman really is dead, merely so he won't see the good name of taxi-related comedy besmirched by this film.

Collegiate virgins manage feelings of estrangement

When I was in high school, a major topic of conversation always was who's doing it and with whom. Being a virgin, my name never came up in these conversations.

Being a virgin wasn't a big deal. My virgin status didn't induce the crisis conflict of having my friends tell me "everyone is doing it," or not being able to get dates because guys knew I wouldn't give it up.

There was no peer pressure to do it or feeling unaccepted because of it. In fact, most of my other friends weren't doing it either.

Things changed when I came to college. Suddenly I was the lone virgin among my new college friends. When we were hanging out, the conversation inevitably turned to guys and then to sex. This was the part of the conversation where I had to shut up and just think, "I wonder what that's like."

I wasn't ashamed to be a virgin by any means, but I did feel like one of the only ones left. I felt as if I was walking around with a huge scarlet "V" for virgin on my chest.

Being a virgin in college can be daunting. It seems like everyone is having sex — friends, roommates, the characters on "The O.C." Virgins are out there, yes, but sometimes it can feel like you're the only one.

I talked to some virgin friends recently on the subject.

Until recently, Marcie was pretty much the virgin in her group. Most of the time, hearing her friends talk about sex didn't leave her feeling left out. That is, unless they were playing the drinking game, Circle of Death.

When the card for "I've never" was drawn, Marcie would sit with her beer in her hand as the others drank repeatedly to their sexual conquests.

"Sometimes you're like 'Why am I waiting?' because everyone else is doing it and talking about how great and wonderful it is," Marcie said. "It's like, 'I want to do it, too!'"

Marcie really wanted to do it, and she was tempted a few times, but held out for the right guy. For her, the desire to lose it to somebody she loved outweighed the desire to do it right now.

This is why Bruce is waiting. And even though he lives in a house of guys who get plenty of booty, he says he never feels left behind when his friends start talking about sex.

"I like talking about it, figuring out what they do," Bruce said. "Just because I've never experienced it doesn't mean I haven't experienced any other sexual experiences."

Bruce said instead of feeling left out when the guys talk, he looks at it as an educational opportunity.

Some might think all guys want to have sex right now and would feel less than manly admitting they haven't yet. Scott assures me this isn't the case. Yes, he does want to have sex, but it's not something he spends a lot of time worrying about.

"It doesn't really bother me," Scott said. "It's not something I wake up everyday thinking, 'How am I going to get some today?'" Scott said.

For those holding out until they have a ring on their finger, their virginity isn't even an issue. My friend Tiffany always has known her virginity is something she wanted to save for the man she was going to marry.

"It's kind of a big deal, and I only want to share it with one person," Tiffany said.

Tiffany's religious and personal beliefs are what have kept her from going all the way when she's tempted, which is hard since she has a serious boyfriend. When they get together for a little naked time, it's those beliefs that keep her virginity intact.

If you're still the big V, and you sometimes feel like the only one left, don't stress too much. Know that there are others like you out there.

And whether you're waiting for the right person or the day you say "I do," know that your time will come. Eventually.

BirdHouse series continues with folk singer-songwriter

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Modern folk singer-songwriter John Gorka will be performing at 8 p.m. tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center in the next performance in the BirdHouse acoustic concert series.

The MAC venue seats an approximate 150 people and will be Gorka's third time performing, the previous two being sold out. The atmosphere of the concert room is similar to "MTV Unplugged" sessions, MAC volunteer, David Kamerer said.

"What we love about the BirdHouse is the intimate listening space that unites the audience and the performer as one. It's very interactive and special," Kamerer said.

Gorka, who is from New Jersey, is a national recording artist for Red House Records now touring across the country. Kamerer said Gorka writes love ballads and songs about the life of a working man in American.

"He has a baritone voice that helps support his ballads," Kamerer said. "He's most beloved by his fans for his love ballads. The blue collar America is also shown in his songwriting."

Gorka's career has spanned more than 15 years and has released nine albums. He has performed with artists such as Shawn Colvin, Suzanne Vega, Cliff Eberhardt, David Massengill and others throughout his career, according to Gorka's official website, www.JohnGorka.com.

Gorka will be following lead act Kenny White, a pianist and songwriter in his own right, promoting his new solo album.

"Kenny White is a solo artist with potential to hit it big," Kamerer said. "He really has every right to be the main performer."

White's lasting career of over 20 years consisted of writing for national films, and recording with other artists including Colvin and Peter Wolf.

Penny Senften, executive director of MAC said the BirdHouse acoustic series are one of the more popular events at the MAC.

"Many of the shows usually sell out," Senften said. "The money earned from the concert will primarily go to MAC."

FCC won't stop airing of anti-Kerry film

The Federal Communications Commission won't intervene to stop a broadcast company's plans to air a critical documentary about John Kerry's anti-Vietnam War activities on dozens of TV stations, the agency's chairman said Thursday.

"Don't look to us to block the airing of a program," Michael Powell told reporters. "I don't know of any precedent in which the commission could do that."

Eighteen senators, all Democrats, wrote to Powell this week and asked him to investigate Sinclair Broadcast Group's plan to run the program, "Stolen Honor: Wounds That Never Heal," two weeks before the Nov. 2 election.

Powell said there are no federal rules that would allow the agency to prevent the program.

"I think that would be an absolute disservice to the First Amendment, and I think it would be unconstitutional if we attempted to do so," he said.

TV Host O'Reilly accused of harassment

Bill O'Reilly, whose Fox News Channel show is the highest-rated cable news program, has been accused of sexual harassment by one of his producers. O'Reilly says the complaint is a politically motivated extortion attempt.

Both sides filed lawsuits Wednesday, with the woman, Andrea Mackris, saying the commentator had phone sex with her against her wishes three times.

In his claim against Mackris and her attorney, Benedict Morelli, O'Reilly said Morelli demanded $60 million in "hush money" to not file lawsuit.

"As a public figure, I have received many threats," he said. "But enough is enough...The threats stop now. I will not give in to extortion."

Wildcats' top runner:

"I think not knowing if we were going to have him back has made us realize we have to step it up," he said. "We want to do all that we can, with or without him. I think we are looking pretty good."

At the Cowboy Jamboree two weeks ago, the K-State men had a record-breaking day. Several of the Wildcat runners set new personal bests. With junior Christian Smith making his season debut this Saturday, the Wildcats are looking to improve their performance even more.

Coach Smith said he expects even faster times this week because he feels his team is beginning to peak at the right time.

"The way they are performing in practice, they will again set or be at their lifetime bests, but that's a prediction," Smith said. "They'll start to feel really good and they will start to race quite a bit better."

The K-State women, coming off a top-five finish at the Cowboy Jamboree, have a tough task ahead of them, as No. 11 SMU and No. 21 Arkansas headline the field of competitors.

Freshman Stephanie Lavin said she is ready to race against some of the best runners in the country.

"I'm ready for the challenge, we all are," Lavin said. "It's kind of intimidating, but not really. Our first few races, there wasn't that many people running. The meets are getting bigger, so it's kind of exciting."

Coach Smith said he expects to see even more improvement from the women this Saturday.

"I think with the women, we'll perform better than we did at the Cowboy Jamboree," he said. "Some of the kids that ran for us at the Jamboree were just getting into shape, and actually, over the last couple of weeks, they have trained at a higher level. I would hope for another top-five finish."

COLUMN | Volcano primed after Seattle sports victories

Strangely Successful Seattle Sports Effect, as it's come to be known, is why did it take several months for the eruption to occur after the Sonics won in 1979, and Mount St. Helens already is starting to blow just days after the Storm's victory?

The answer is simple. And it has to do with the Seattle Seahawks.

In just their fourth year as a franchise, the Seahawks had their second winning season in the fall of 1979, missing the playoffs with a 9-7 record. This past winter, the Seahawks made the playoffs, and this fall they're off to a 3-1 start.

In 1979, the geothermal sports gods were not completely appeased by the Sonics NBA title, and held off with the fireworks several months into 1980 until the Seahawks' season was over, just in case they too made a title run.

So now the Storm have a title and the volcano is already starting to rumble. If Mount St. Helens holds off until next spring, even the doubters will believe in the Strangely Successful Seattle Sports Effect. All that's left is for us to wait and see how the Seahawks finish the year, which should determine the magnitude of the blast.

Heaven help us all if they win the Super Bowl.

Nutrition consultation program begins

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students now can sign up for a program designed to encourage awareness of total nutrition called "Get your Eat'n On!"

The program provides one on one consultation with health and nutrition experts, said Marian Brandenburg, administrative specialist for recreational services.

The program is for a period of six weeks in which participants will be given individual counseling on good nutrition and the basics of eating well, she said.

Brandenburg said the fee for enrolling in the program is $15 plus tax and positions are filled on a first come, first serve basis. Oct. 25 is the registration deadline.

Since the number of consultants is limited, the program can accommodate only the first 50 participants but is open to all those interested in signing up, Brandenburg said.

The program is in its second year and provides an ideal supplement to spring break training, said Stephanie Caoutte, student coordinator of the program.

The consultants are all K-State students who had received proper training in the field and are well versed with the nuances of fitness and well being, she said.

Caoutte said the program is designed to get people to slowly change their eating habits rather than rush things.

One subject would be discussed every week and participants would be made aware of one concept at a time, she said.

"Working with peers made it easier to relate to the program and increased the program's uniqueness. Also, the program is comparatively inexpensive and offers several safe and healthy benefits," she said.

Deficit report shows record increase

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — The federal deficit surged to a record $413 billion in 2004, the Treasury Department announced Thursday, injecting the figure into a presidential campaign in which the two parties have clashed over President Bush's management of the economy and the budget.

The number was a significant improvement from the shortfalls that analysts projected earlier this year, including a $521 billion estimate the Bush administration made in February. In March, the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office estimated a deficit of $477 billion.

Both the administration and the Congressional Budget Office had lowered their deficit forecasts as the year progressed, largely due to stronger than expected revenue collections.

Even so, the final deficit figure released Thursday easily surpassed the previous record in dollar terms, a revised $377 billion deficit that was run up last year.

In a statement, Treasury Secretary John Snow cited improving economic data and said the budgetary improvement shows Bush is on track to halve the deficit over five years as he has promised.

"All of this shows that the president's tax relief initiatives are having the intended effects," Snow said.

Democrats said they disagreed.

"There is simply no credible way to present the largest deficit in history as good news," said Rep. John Spratt of South Carolina, top Democrat on the House Budget Committee.

"The Republicans control the House, the Senate and the White House, but today's news proves again they have failed to control the budget."

&
TREASURES

Creating opportunities, building traditions

Your life as a K-State student has been greatly enhanced through the generosity of those alumni and friends who have chosen to give their Time, Talents and Treasures to Kansas State University. Remember the graciousness of others when you are in a position to be equally gracious.

This is our challenge to you:

Will YOU join them?

CONTEST | Competition promotes research, aids in university recruitment said. "I first started having my team practice twice a week and as the contest got closer they practiced every day."

McKinnon said her team practiced on the meat in her freezer, but they also used other methods.

"They looked at slides, cards and the Internet is becoming a great resource for meat judging," she said.

Karlea Pearson, 15, of the Harper County, Okla., team, said she started meat judging after her mother mentioned it to her.

"I like it because it's a challenge," she said. "It makes you think."

Pearson said she can apply her knowledge to everyday activities.

"I help pick out better steak to eat when my family goes to the grocery store," she said.

Melinda Kessie, 18, of the Kosciusko County, Ind., team, said she thinks meat judging helps with other skills as well.

"I think it helps with your public speaking skills, and your reasoning skills," she said.

Rob Maddock, from South Dakota State University, tells the coaches of the 4-H youth his reasons for ranking the best butchered pig.

Schafer said the contest is a good way to attract potential students to the university.

"We think it's something to be proud of," he said.

Students traveled to Kansas City, Mo., last night and will receive their awards today at the American Royal.

In two weeks the National Future Farmers of America meat judging contest will host high school students in St. Louis.

CHARGES | Prison death investigation ends with possible charges

James P. Boland of the Army Reserve's 377th Military Police Company, based in Cincinnati, was charged Aug. 23 with assault and dereliction of duty.

For the other 27, their commanding officers will make the final call on whether they face a court-martial, administrative discipline or no disciplinary action.

The deaths, in early December 2002, were ruled homicides by U.S. military medical examiners.

Others who are expected to face charges are from the 519th Military Intelligence Battalion from Fort Bragg, N.C. Some members of the 519th went from Afghanistan to Iraq in 2003 and are among those accused by Army investigators of abusing Iraqi detainees in fall 2003.

Jumana Musa, an advocacy director with Amnesty International, said in a statement that the investigation into the deaths took far too long, and that the 22-month interval "is not conducive to protecting prisoners from torture and abuse."

"In fact, the failure to promptly account for the prisoners' deaths indicates a chilling disregard for the value of human life and may have laid the groundwork for further abuses in Abu Ghraib and elsewhere," Musa said. She called for an independent investigation into all U.S. detention operations overseas.

In the first case, Mullah Habibullah, believed to be about 28, died of "pulmonary embolism due to blunt force injuries to the legs," according to doctors. He was in detention at Bagram, Afghanistan. Previous reports said he died Dec. 3; the Army's announcement Thursday put his death as Dec. 4.

About a week later, on Dec. 10, an Afghan identified only as Dilawar, 22, died in U.S. custody at Bagram. Doctors blamed his death on "blunt force injuries to lower extremities complicating coronary artery disease."

Boland's charge sheet lists one count of dereliction of duty in connection with Habibullah's death.

The sheet says Boland, who was a guard at the Bagram prison, was derelict "in that he negligently, willfully or through culpable inefficiency" failed to take corrective action against another soldier who struck Habibullah while he was restrained. The name of the other soldier was blacked out for privacy reasons; his rank was specialist.

The other charges are in connection with Dilawar's death. Boland is accused of dereliction of duty for failing to seek medical treatment for the prisoner, "who was visibly in need of medical care and later died," according to the charge sheet issued by Army Forces Command.

Boland also is charged with mistreating Dilawar "by shackling him in a standing position with hands suspended above shoulder level for a prolonged period of time."

An alternate charge of assault is listed, citing the same description of a prolonged shackling of Dilawar.

Iraqi insurgents enter Baghdad's Green Zone

By Nadia Abou El-Magd
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Insurgents penetrated Baghdad's heavily fortified Green Zone and detonated explosives at a market and a popular cafe Thursday, killing 10 people, including four American civilians, in the first bombings inside the compound housing the U.S. and Iraqi government headquarters.

A top Iraqi official said the attacks appeared to have been suicide bombings. The attack was a bold assault on the heart of the U.S.-Iraqi leadership of the country and a district seen as one of the few relatively safe refuges for Americans in the capital.

Witnesses said two men, each carrying a backpack but not required ID badges, entered the Green Zone Cafe full of Americans and other patrons at around lunchtime, drank tea and talked to each other for nearly half an hour one of them appearing to reassure his more nervous colleague.

One of them then left and soon after an explosion was heard, then the man who remained in the cafe detonated his bomb moments later, ripping through the building, said an Iraqi vendor who was in the cafe at the time. A bomb was found and defused at the same cafe last week.

Tawhid and Jihad, the militant group of Jordanian terror mastermind Abu Musab al-Zarqawi claimed responsibility for the blasts, saying they were martyrdom or suicide attacks.

Also Thursday, two U.S. soldiers were killed in Baghdad, one in a roadside bombing in the morning and the second in a shooting in the afternoon, the military said. As of Wednesday, 1,081 U.S. servicemen had been killed in Iraq since March 2003, according to a Defense Department count.

The Green Zone, a district of former Saddam Hussein palaces in a bend of the Tigris River, was set up under the U.S. occupation to house Americans involved in the administration. It came to resemble a suburban "Little America" in central Baghdad with green lawns, restaurants, American television, U.S. area codes, even at least one swimming pool set up behind barricades and multiple checkpoints.

Since the June handover of sovereignty, the Iraqi government has set up its offices there, but hundreds of Americans remain as part of the U.S. Embassy. In the increasing violence of recent months, the American civilians rarely leave the Green Zone. Around 10,000 Iraqis also live within the four square-mile zone, residents of the apartment buildings that had to be included within the perimeter. They need IDs to move in and out of the area.

Thursday's attack raised fears over security in the compound and underscored militants' ability to strike in the capital even as U.S.-Iraqi forces are carrying out a new offensive to suppress them in other parts of the country ahead of January elections.

Insurgents have frequently fired mortar rounds at the compound, and there have been a number of deadly car bombings at its gates. But this was the first time a bomb was successfully brought in and detonated.

In the wake of the bombings, the embassy warned Americans to limit their movements in the Green Zone and stay away from the market and restaurants.

The U.S. military announced increased armed patrols in and around the Green Zone, at the airport and other checkpoints, and combat air patrols and air surveillance.

The new measures followed intelligence reports that insurgents are planning to launch attacks to gain media attention, the statement said. "Anti-Iraqi forces are trying to create the perception of instability in Iraq and thereby disrupt the upcoming Iraqi elections."

In Thursday's attacks, one bomb ripped through Vendors' Alley, an outdoor bazaar that caters to Westerners, selling everything from mobile phone accessories to pornographic DVDs.

The second blast took place at the Green Zone Cafe. Witnesses said around 20 other patrons were in the cafe at the time, about half of them American.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said the bazaar bombing killed four Americans and wounded another contractor and two State Department employees. The cafe blast killed six Iraqis and wounded an American contractor.

Navrathri Festival set for this weekend in K-State Student Union

By U. Bhagavathy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If you go
Navrathri Festival

When: 7 to 11 p.m. Saturday
Where: Union Ballroom

A riot of colors splashed across a dull canvass can describe the Indian festival of Navrathri.

The festival will be from 7 to 11 p.m. Saturday in the Union Ballroom.

Navrathri, which translates into 'nine nights,' is sacred to the Mother Goddess and is celebrated in the months of October and November.

It is a festival of worship, dance and music celebrated over a period of nine nights.

The most distinctive characteristic of this festival is the traditional dance, Dandiya.

Dandiya is an energetic, colorful and playful dance providing opportunity for acting and exchanging messages through eye contact. In this dance form from the Western part of India, two circles formed by men and women move in clockwise and counter-clockwise directions with sticks called dandiya held in their hands.

Sham Kashyap, president of the India Student Association said the festival is always an enthusiastic time of year.

"This year, we have assigned certain volunteers who will be teaching the people present, the nitty-gritty of the dance. It'll be our pleasure if everybody in K-State joins us in our revelry. More the merrier," Kashyap said.

THEY SAID IT

"We feel like we can be on the same field with any team. We have nothing to lose playing against Oklahoma. It's just like going out against anyone. You are playing to win."

No. 2 Oklahoma at K-State

Time: 11 a.m.

Radio: Mid-America Sports Network

Television: ABC Sports

History: K-State has won six of the last nine meetings, including the Big 12 Championship game.

PLAYER TO WATCH

Adrian Peterson tore up a highly-regarded Texas defense last week for 225 yards and two touchdowns. K-State's run defense is ranked 66th in the nation and will have its hands full with the freshman who is the fourth leading rusher in the nation.

Pull out all the stops against the Sooners

You hear people say it all the time, but Saturday, K-State truly has nothing to lose when it goes up against Oklahoma.

Nobody is giving the Wildcats a chance against the No. 2 Sooners — just look at the betting line that has Oklahoma favored by 20.

If ever there was a time for K-State to pull out all of the stops, this is it.

Trick plays, all-out blitzes, revamped strategy on both sides of the ball — let's see it all.

At 2-3 overall and 0-2 in the Big 12 Conference, the Wildcats are obviously hurting.

Coaches and players can say they have moved on from last Saturday's loss to Kansas. I just don't buy it.

The loss ending over a decade's worth of domination over the Jayhawks was absolutely devastating to anybody with any stake in the Wildcat football program.

Now is a time to make a statement.

Besides the die-hard K-State football fans — who seem to be becoming fewer in numbers by the week — everybody keeping an eye out on Saturday's nationally-televised game on ABC will expect the Sooners to thrash the Wildcats.

Logic suggests an already far-superior Oklahoma team will play with even more fire, searching for revenge after last season's 35-7 defeat at the hands of the Wildcats in the Big 12 Championship game.

Oklahoma is loaded with weapons.

A returning Heisman Trophy winner in quarterback Jason White and freshman running back sensation Adrian Peterson highlight the Sooners' weapons on offense.

And that defense, which some said was down this year?

Oh, it just pitched a shutout last weekend against Cedric Benson and the Texas Longhorn crew in the Red River Shootout.

Not bad.

On the flip side of the "good times" equation is K-State.

The defense, though it made strides against the Jayhawks, still has issues with giving up big plays.

The offense — well, it's simple.

When sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier runs the team, the offense is good. When he doesn't, it's bad.

According to Coach Bill Snyder and Meier himself, the sophomore will be able to play Saturday after sitting out the first half of last week's game before that phenomenal, 249-yard second-half passing performance.

This is good news, but much more is needed for the Wildcats to compete Saturday.

All the stops need to be pulled out.

Now, that's not saying players and coaches have mailed it in so far this season, but the Oklahoma game is going require everyone to take it to the next level.

Let's see something like that hook n' ladder Kansas hurt the Cats with last Saturday. Let's see senior tight end Brian Casey used much, much, much more in the offense.

And hey, if senior running back Darren Sproles is struggling, let's air it out. What's wrong with going to the air 50 times Saturday?

Hey, if Meier can perform like he did against the Jayhawks, I like the odds of the wide receiving core of sophomores Yamon Figurs and Jermaine Moreira and senior Tony Madison making some big plays.

On defense, how about going all out after White?

We saw what happened last year when White was knocked around by the Wildcat defense, and though he now has a new buddy in Peterson in the backfield to take some pressure off of him, I have to think the nightmare of last year's game still lingers in his head.

So let's see everything, Wildcats.

Nobody thinks you'll win — even me, check out the prediction on page seven.

But this game is huge.

K-State doesn't have to win, but a strong, competitive showing is vital in rejuvenating the spirit of the team, as the Cats try to rebound from what has been so far a disappointing season.

GAMETIME

OFFENSE

Edge

The Wildcats are averaging 29.2 points per game and lead the Big 12 in time of possession at more than 35 minutes a game.

Darren Sproles leads the conference with 206 all-purpose yards a game. Quarterback Dylan Meier is averaging 193.8 total yards a game, tied for seventh in the Big 12 with Oklahoma's Jason White. Much of the Wildcats' success Saturday will depend on Sproles, and Meier, who missed the first half of the Kansas game with an injury but is expected to start against the Sooners.

Quarterback Jason White. Running backs Adrian Peterson and Kejuan Jones. Receivers Mark Clayton and Travis Wilson. These are some of the weapons in Oklahoma's offensive arsenal, which is putting up 34.8 points per game. White won the Heisman Trophy in 2003. Peterson, a true freshman, is third in the conference with 154.2 yards rushing per game. Clayton averages 67.8 yards receiving per game, and Wilson leads all Sooners with four touchdown catches. Last time the two met, Oklahoma was held to seven points.

DEFENSE

The Wildcats' leading tackler, junior linebacker Marvin Simmons with six per game, is tied for 20th in the conference.

Translation: More players need step up and tackle. The unit is giving up 30.2 points per game. Translation: K-State is in big trouble against Oklahoma. So far, the Wildcats haven't been able to consistently stop the pass or the run, and the Sooners can do both very well. To have a chance, they'll have to come close to duplicating that pressure. Oh, and they have to tackle Adrian Peterson.

In the last two weeks, the Sooners have shut down one of the nation's top passing teams in Texas Tech and one of its top rushing teams in Texas. Last Saturday, they handed the Longhorns their first shutout in 281 games. Oklahoma is only yielding 11.4 points per game, tops in the Big 12. Even after losing the Butkus, Lombardi and Thorpe Award winners in linebacker Teddy Lehman, defensive tackle Tommie Harris and cornerback Derrick Strait, respectively, the Sooner defense hasn't missed a beat.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Senior kicker Joe Rheem is 9-10 on field goals and perfect on extra-point attempts. The Wildcats average 22.7 yards per kickoff return. That's the good news. The bad: K-State is last in the conference in punt returns (4.7 yards per return) and punting (a dismal 28.8 yards per kick).

The Sooners average 40.6 yards per punt, 22.8 yards per kickoff return and 11.8 yards per punt return. Kicker Trey DiCarlo is 5-7 on the year. The Sooner's biggest threat on special teams Antonio Perkins, who tied the NCAA record for touchdowns on punt returns with eight, will miss Saturday's game.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 45 - OKLAHOMA 42 (2OT)

Oklahoma has the better team and should dominate. They will, but they'll make just enough mistakes for an inspired Wildcat squad to stay close. The loyal K-State fans will have KSU Stadium rocking, and Coach Bill Snyder will deliver more of the same magic that beat the Sooners last December. The better team doesn't always win, as any K-Stater would have said after last Saturday. K-State wins in a miraculous thriller again.

Peterson taking country by storm

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Adrian Peterson entered the 2004 season with a load of expectations.

Widely regarded as the best incoming freshman running back in the nation, Peterson had the daunting task of living up to the hype in his first season with the Oklahoma Sooners.

So far, task accomplished. Peterson enters Saturday's game against K-State on a roll.

The Texas native ran over the Texas Longhorns in last weekend's Red River Shootout, rushing for 225 yards on 32 carries in the Sooners' 12-0 win.

Wildcat coaches are taking notice.

"He's a great player," defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. "He's a challenge for us or anybody else."

Peterson has taken the college football scene by storm, compiling 771 yards and six touchdowns in five games. His 154 yards rushing per game is fourth-best in the country.

Elliott said the physical way in which Peterson runs is his most impressive attribute.

"He attacks you with the ball, and that's grabbed my attention," Elliott said. "I haven't seen a guy run like that, run that hard in a long time."

K-State hopes for repeat performance versus Sooners

Memory of Big 12 championship game lingers

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Lightning never strikes in the same place twice," is how the saying goes.

The K-State Wildcats are looking to disprove that Saturday when the No. 2 Oklahoma Sooners come to Manhattan for a rematch of the 2003 Big 12 Conference championship game.

Although Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo., is more than 120 miles from KSU Stadium, the Wildcats (2-3, 0-2) once again will face an undefeated Sooners team (5-0, 2-0) that is fighting for a national championship.

"It's kind of the same scenario. Nobody is really expecting us to beat Oklahoma this weekend, but it was like that in December," junior defensive end Scott Edmonds said. "We are just taking the same approach to them, and we have to be prepared for them."

Despite Oklahoma leading the all-time series 66-17-4, K-State has won six of the last nine meetings between the schools, including a 35-7 win for the Wildcats' first ever Big 12 crown last December.

The K-State defense dominated then-No. 1 Oklahoma by harassing eventual Heisman Trophy winner Jason White with three sacks and two interceptions, and the Wildcat offense put on a show with 519 yards of total offense.

Junior offensive tackle Jeromey Clary said this year's Wildcat team is different and has to forget about last year's game against the Sooners.

"I think you can look back at it for some confidence, but we have to put that behind us," Clary said.

Unlike the 2003 K-State team, which was riding a six-game winning streak heading into the Big 12 Championship game, the 2004 Wildcats come into the game losers of three of their last four games and with two straight conference losses.

The Sooners come into Manhattan winners of their last two conference games, including their fifth-straight victory over Texas in the annual Red River Shootout.

Freshman running back Adrian Peterson rushed for 225 yards on 32 carries and a touchdown against the Longhorns and is currently fourth in the nation in rushing, averaging 154.2 yards per game.

K-STATE vs. KU

Scott Edmonds attempts to tackle Adam Barmann during the first quarter Saturday afternoon at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence, Kan.

Junior defensive end steps up against Kansas

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the game everyone had been waiting for from junior defensive end Scott Edmonds.

In the 31-28 loss to Kansas last Saturday, the 6-foot-4 inch Kansas City, Mo., native was one of the lone defensive bright spots, registering a career-high eight tackles, a forced fumble and two quarterback sacks against the Jayhawks.

Prior to the Sunflower Showdown, Edmonds was off to a slow start for the Wildcats with only six total tackles, one sack and two forced fumbles.

Despite his low totals for the season, defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said Edmonds has been playing with heart.

"He was inspired and played hard (against Kansas)," Elliott said. "He just did everything he could do for us and gave everything he had on that field, and he has done that for the last several weeks."

Coming into 2004, Edmonds was expected to be

K-State's key pass rusher after a sophomore season in which he had 25 total tackles and six sacks in 15 games. Edmonds also was fourth on the team with 10 tackles for loss in 2003.

The Rockhurst High School product was best known in 2003 for his acrobatic pass deflection after being upended by a running back and batting a pass down with his legs in a 38-10 victory over Baylor at KSU Stadium. Edmonds nearly accomplished the feat again Saturday in the first quarter of the Kansas game.

As Edmonds rushed the Jayhawks' sophomore quarterback, Adam Barmann, he was again upended by a running back and nearly blocked Barmann's pass with his leg.

Defensive ends coach Joe Bob Clements said the big plays will come to Edmonds.

"He's playing with good effort and as long as Scott continues to play with that type of effort and if you do that for 50 snaps a game, then eventually a big play will come your way," Clements said.

Edmonds said although he was off to a slow start earlier in the season, he has not changed his style of play.

"I didn't do anything differently. I just think things are coming along for me, and that's how I expect to play every game," Edmonds said.

"I didn't do anything differently. I just think things are coming along for me, and that's how I expect to play every game."

Scott Edmonds
DEFENSIVE END

Edmonds and his defensive end counterpart, senior Kevin Huntley, once again will have their hands full with an explosive Oklahoma Sooners offense coming to town.

Clements said both ends have gradually stepped up throughout the season.

"They have both improved and neither one of these guys were full-time players last year," Clements said. "They had playing experience last year, but the concept of being full-time players at defensive end is new to them."

"I've been pleased with the progress they have made. They haven't made all the plays they want to make or we want them to make early in the season, but they have been getting better at that."

Penalties continue to plague Wildcats

Team hopes to cut down on flags

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week against the Kansas Jayhawks, K-State was marred by costly penalties which forced the Wildcats into many unpleasant situations.

The Wildcats were flagged 11 times for 120 yards, by far the most this season and the most since committing 10 fouls for 96 yards against California in last season's opener.

Senior tight end Brian Casey said the team's focus was a factor in the rash of penalties.

"We just weren't concentrating enough in this game, and there was a lack of focus in some areas," Casey said. "You just have to get in better position, get more focused and concentrate better during the play to where you don't make those stupid mistakes."

The Wildcats were hit with a number of damaging penalties that killed some of their offensive drives, and likewise sustained some of the Jayhawks' drives.

K-State was forced to settle for a field goal after a delay-of-game penalty in the first half stalled a drive in Jayhawk territory.

A roughing-the-passer call on Jermaine Berry gave KU new life and eventually led to a touchdown that put the Jayhawks ahead.

Junior defensive end Scott Edmonds said the calls were frustrating, but the team needs to learn to shrug them off.

"We have no control over the referees and what their calls are," Edmonds said. "The roughing-the-passer call — if we can't touch the quarterback, then we're not playing football. But no matter what position we put ourselves in or what happens to us, we just have to keep playing through that stuff."

Before the loss to the Jayhawks, the Wildcats averaged just 36 penalty yards a game and were the second-least penalized team in the Big 12. After last Saturday, the Wildcats' average jumped sharply to almost 53 yards a game.

Senior center Mike Johnson said the problems are all correctable.

"We try to control the penalties every week. It's really just a discipline thing," Johnson said. "Everyone has to be really disciplined in practice in all aspects. The results of those penalties were a lack of discipline."

Casey said not every call is going to be favorable, but that is the nature of the system.

"Two things you can't control are the weather and the referees in each game," Casey said. "Different referees look for different things when they are calling the games. Penalties will kill you, but hopefully, we'll have better discipline this week and not get as many."

Big 12 keeps on running

To say the Big 12 Conference is a running conference would be an understatement.

Through the first six weeks of the 2004 season, Big 12 teams have rushed for more than 11,000 yards, averaging 178.7 yards rushing per game, and the conference has six schools ranking in the top 25 of the nation in the category.

Of the six major college football conferences, only the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Big Ten Conference have eclipsed the 10,000-yard mark, and with three schools averaging more than 250 yards on the ground per game, it appears the Big 12 will continue to go with what works.

In 2003, the Big 12 gained 27,040 yards on the ground with five teams averaging more than 200 yards per game. This season with seven schools averaging at least 180 yards a game, the conference could rack up more than 30,000 yards. The closest conference to the Big 12 in rushing is the ACC, but it trails by nearly 800 yards.

Even the generally pass-happy offense of No. 2 Oklahoma, which only averaged 145.9 yards per game in 2003, has seen the light and is averaging more than 250 yards per game, due to the emergence of freshman running back Adrian Peterson.

Including Peterson, the Big 12 has four of the top 10 rushers in the nation. Junior Vernand Morency of Oklahoma State leads the conference and is second in the nation with 869 yards.

Texas senior Cedric Benson is third with 838 yards, Peterson is fifth with 771 yards and K-State's senior running back Darren Sproles is ninth with 684 yards.

The four are averaging a whopping 632.4 combined rushing yards per game.

One of these four also could break the stranglehold quarterbacks have on college football's top prize, the Heisman Trophy. In the last eight years, quarterbacks have won the trophy five times, including four straight. Former Wisconsin Badger Ron Dayne was the last running back to win the award in 1999.

Of course, these numbers wouldn't be possible without some of the nation's best offensive linemen clearing holes and shoving defensive players up and down the field — and they love it.

I've often heard many lineman say there is nothing better than run blocking. It's their time to shine and instead of sitting back waiting for a defensive player to come at them, they get to lay somebody out, and these running backs appreciate it.

It definitely makes it easier for running backs to gain yardage when you have five 350-pound teammates running in front of you.

While the rest of the country consistently relies on the passing game to score quickly and often, the Big 12 has gone back to the days of lore when there were routinely three running backs in the backfield and even though defenses knew exactly what was coming, they couldn't stop it.

It's how championships should be won — with ball control and smash-mouth football.

nationally, and in last week's loss to Kansas, the special teams unit gave up 54 yards on three punt returns.

"We're not very good, that's the main deal," Snyder said. "I think in our punt coverage, it's just a matter of being able to not get bunched up and fan out, and that sounds like a pretty easy thing and make tackles."

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the play of special teams is important to the Wildcats success.

"We're not playing well on special teams. That is symptomatic. Special teams performance is symptomatic of this football team," Elliott said. "Those are the problems — tackling in the open field, speed to the ball, those are things that good special teams have, and Kansas State has always had that."

Senior receiver Tony Madison said Meier and Webb bring positives to the offense, but Meier has the advantage of experience.

"It's a tough process," Meier said. "Allen got thrown in the fire and it's unfortunate for him. He didn't really know going in. It's tough on him. He's a fighter, he'll come back, and I'll guarantee he'll help us in the future."

Snyder said Meier will start Saturday, but whichever quarterback plays, he'll have to play well for K-State to have a chance of knocking off Oklahoma.

2 men arrested in connection to Chicago murder

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two men were arrested in the Manhattan area in connection with a Chicago homicide investigation.

On Saturday, the Chicago Police Department requested the Riley County Police Department's assistance in investigating a homicide that occurred Thursday in Chicago, according to a press release.

Officers arrested Lee McGee, 37, during a traffic stop on Kansas Highway 177, south of Manhattan. Bond was set at $2 million.

The RCPD also arrested Pierre M. Cole, 22, of Fort Riley. He was arrested at the Blue Valley Trailer Court. Cole's bond was set at $1.5 million.

The case is still under investigation by the Chicago Police Department.

Supreme Court's commandments case has Junction City connection

By James Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Supreme Court will decide a case with local implications.

Justices will decide a case involving the display of the Ten Commandments on government property — a dispute being fought in Junction City and resolved four years ago in Manhattan.

At the center of one of the two cases in front of the Supreme Court is a monolith displaying the commandments that was donated to cities by the Fraternal Order of Eagles — the same monolith given to Manhattan and Junction City in 1958.

The Supreme Court's decision will decide the fate of the monolith in Junction City, City Manager Rod Barnes said.

Michael Brown and Tyrell Brown, who are brothers from Junction City, raised the issue when they requested a statue of Buddha be placed next to the monolith in front of the municipal building.

Upon denial, the brothers asked the monolith be removed.

Barnes said Mayor Mick Wunder, who leads the City Commission, would fight to keep the monolith in its current location.

"The City Commission is probably not taking any action," Barnes said.

Wunder could not be reached but told The Daily Union, in Junction City, he would work as a private citizen to ensure the monolith was not moved.

Wunder and the commission have the power to move the monolith, as Manhattan City Commission did in 1999.

Manhattan Commissioners voted 3-2 to move the monolith from City Hall grounds, and returned it to the Fraternal Order of Eagles. The Eagles then donated the monolith to Manhattan Christian College. It is displayed on MCC's campus at the corner of 14th Street and Anderson Avenue.

Manhattan Commissioner Bruce Snead, who voted to remove the monolith, said the result was the best possible resolution for the community.

Because the city no longer owns the monolith, there is no chance it would return, regardless what the Supreme Court decides, Snead said.

The court agreed to hear the case after nearly 25 years since hearing a similar case. In those years, lower courts have issued

Student memorial set for today at All Faiths

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and faculty will remember the life of Barbara Meyer at a campus memorial today.

Meyer, senior in political science, was killed on Oct. 10 when she was rear-ended by a semi on I-70 near mile marker 320.

Meyer was then pushed across the median into oncoming traffic and was struck by an eastbound car.

The driver of the trailer, Larry Bulmer, 64, of Ottawa, Kan., was not injured. The driver of the eastbound car, Angel Simmons, 20, of Topeka, was treated at Stormont-Vail Regional Health Center and released.

All drivers were wearing seat belts.

Kansas Highway Patrol Lt. John Eichkorn said Bulmer fell asleep while driving. No citations have been issued; however, the case has been forwarded to the Riley County attorney.

Meyer was the Collegian's opinion editor and president of Young Democrats as well as a volunteer for CASA and Westview Community Church.

The memorial service will be led by Scott Seel, Collegian city/government editor.

"First and foremost we want to honor the all too short life of Barbara Meyer, but also, we hope it will help students, friends, co-workers and her family deal with their grief during a very painful and trying experience," he said.

The service's meditation will be delivered by Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, and there will be time for anyone in attendance to speak.

Seel said while he is hopeful the service will provide comfort for those now living without Meyer, the service will honor all areas of her life.

"Hopefully students will see the dedicated, selfless, and genuinely joyous Barbara," he said.

"Hopefully they will see the student, the sister, the daughter, the fiancée, the aunt, the president of Young Democrats, the opinion editor at the Collegian, the friend, that she was for so many people. We just want people to see the Barbara that we all knew and loved."

K-State loses by 10 to No. 2 Oklahoma; first conference victory still alludes Wildcats

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prior to kickoff at Saturday's K-State/Oklahoma game, a highlight package of last season's 35-7 Wildcat win over the Sooners in the Big 12 Championship game was shown on the KSU Stadium video screen.

For several minutes, fans were able to forget about K-State's two consecutive losses to open up Big 12 play and sub-.500 record. Then for three quarters, the Wildcats gave the third-largest crowd in KSU Stadium history reason to believe victory over the highly-favored No. 2 Sooners (6-0, 3-0) was possible again, only to see K-State fall 31-21.

Coach Bill Snyder said he was pleased with many aspects of the game, but the team needs to prove they can play well for an entire game. "We did some good things on defense. We did some good things on offense. We did some good things in the kicking game as well, but we didn't do them for 60 minutes," Snyder said.

"We just aren't good enough for 60 minutes right now in any facet of what we do."

Indeed, though the Wildcats (2-4, 0-3) found some success on both sides of the ball and had a 21-17 lead as late as 9:52 in the third quarter on sophomore linebacker Brandon Archer's 27-yard interception return for a touchdown, they failed to make the necessary plays late in the game to pull off the victory.

In a departure from the season's first five games, in which senior running back Darren Sproles dominated the offensive game plan, sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier led an efficient offensive attack in the first half, throwing for 153 yards and a touchdown. The Wildcats trailed by just three, 17-14, at the half.

Co-offensive coordinator Del Miller said

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

The presidential race tightens

Graphic based on Oct. 17 polling data compiled by Electoral-Vote.com.

Staff and wire reports

Depending on which poll you read, President Bush and John Kerry are either tied or — tied.

The Washington Post had Bush up 50 percent to Kerry's 47 percent, but with a 5-percent margin of error, the lead is non-existent.

Several other national polls showed similar results.

DIGGING FOR CLUES

Kansas law-enforcement agencies are searching in Morton County, Kan., for what could be up to two dozen bodies of murder victims.

A search warrant was issued, and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius said there had been rumors of bodies buried in the area for several years.

RECORD DEFICIT

President Bush is No. 1 — he is the president in office when the federal government racked up its largest deficit in history.

The Treasury Department announced Thursday a record deficit of $413 billion in 2004.

KERRY MOVIE

A documentary outlining John Kerry's anti-Vietnam War activities will be shown by all of Sinclair Broadcasting's affiliates after Federal Communications Commission Chairman Michael Powell said the body did not have the power to prevent it from being aired.

Critics say the documentary amounts to political advertising.

DEBATE DRAMA

President Bush and challenger John Kerry finished the final of three debates Thursday, with most declaring it a draw or slim victory for either candidate.

The most talked about comments in the domestic-policy debate revolved around Kerry's reference to Vice President Dick Cheney's lesbian daughter.

Kerry

IRAQ VIOLENCE

Insurgent attacks continued in Iraq, including two attacks on U.S. convoys in Mosul and a suicide bombing in Baghdad.

The attacks penetrated into the Green Zone, a heavily fortified compound that houses U.S. civilians and Iraqi government officials.

NO SPIN

Fox News personality Bill O'Reilly filed a lawsuit accusing a coworker of trying to extort 60 million dollars from him; hours later, she filed a lawsuit against him for forcing her into having phone sex with him.

O'Reilly and Fox News dismissed Associate Producer Andrea Mackris' claims as politically motivated.

Group displays signs with messages opposing abortion

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dozens of K-State students lined the sidewalks Sunday along Anderson Avenue to voice their opposition to abortion.

Holding signs bearing phrases such as "God, forgive us and our country," "Abortion kills children," and "Abortion is Homicide," the group staged the protest from 2 to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Chris Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

Jenna Newsum, freshman in psychology and pre-law, and Renae Cikanek, freshman in pre-medicine, display signs against abortion Sunday afternoon along Anderson Avenue. Students from the Students for the Right of Life group stood on both sides of Anderson and displayed signs for passersby in passing cars to see.

Students for the Right to Life President Katie Seiler, sophomore in elementary education, said the group just wants to get the truth out.

"Our messages are just pretty simple," Seiler said. "It's just plain and simply the truth."

She said that while the group has done this every year, the participation is up this year.

"I'm very pleased with the turnout," Seiler said. "I was worried that, since it's such a nice day, people wouldn't come out, but this was amazing."

This year, she said, is more of an issue because of the election.

"This is the most unselfish way to vote," Seiler said.

She said when you vote on education, it's important, but it does not involve people dying.

Group member Mary Livengood, senior in veterinary medicine, said while the issue was in the forefront this year, its importance does not change over time.

"I think it's important every year," Livengood said. "I would be out here on the sidewalk anyway."

Garrett Ridder, junior in secondary education, said he was protesting to protect the sanctity of life.

"People chose to kill the most innocent among us," Ridder said. "At one time, everyone was a fetus."

He said most people are either uninformed or chose not to inform themselves about abortion.

The event, Ridder said, is a prelude to Life Week, which is a week of activities around the country which he said are designed to promote pro-life legislation.

"A Vision for the State School Board" followed by a question and answer session.

What to expect

Martin, a Republican, is running for the school board seat in the 6th district. She argues that creationism should be taught alongside evolution in science classes. She wants science standards to be revisited. She beat out evolution friendly Republican Bruce Wyatt in the Aug. 3 primary.

Why you should go

Although Martin is running unopposed in November, other seats are up for grabs and potentially tipping the board in favor of creationism teachings. Kansas received national attention in 1999, when the board voted in favor of science standards that did not include evolution. Later in 2001, the board reinstated previous standards that included evolution.

Dam secured in case of quake

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is leading a $206 million project to ensure Tuttle Creek Dam can withstand an earthquake.

The Dam Safety Assurance Program includes a dam failure warning system and stabilizing the ground beneath the dam so that it might withstand an earthquake of up to 6.6 magnitude on the Richter Scale.

While the sirens are in place, stabilizing the dam might take up to 10 years, Project Manager Bill Empson said.

The dam will be stabilized by drilling holes and injecting concrete into the soil beneath the dam.

Empson said the dam can withstand an earthquake up to 5.7 magnitude.

"The likelihood of an earthquake that size is somewhere between 3 percent to 100 percent every three years as a baseline," he said. "The largest event history recorded in 1867 was 5.1," he said. "There is evidence of events before that, but there are no recordings of them."

Empson said the warning sirens can be activated from four different locations.

"They can be activated from Kansas City, from the Riley County Emergency Operations Center, from the dam, and we also have vehicles with equipment to activate them," he said.

Geology Professor George Clark said no one can really determine whether or not an earthquake is going to happen.

"What we can say is, since people have been here keeping records, the strongest earthquake we have had was far too weak to damage that dam," he said.

Clark said the closest fault line in the area is between Manhattan and Wamego; however, it is unclear whether it is responsible for the earthquake in 1867.

According to statistics from the Bureau of Reclamation, about 13,000 people live downstream from Tuttle Creek Dam.

Eisenhower Middle School is also in its path.

Michele Jones, communications director for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said Eisenhower Middle School will take part in an evacuation drill Wednesday to prepare students in case of a dam failure.

"We are treating it like it's a real evacuation," she said. "For instance, the nurse will need to take all medication, and each teacher will need to have the class roster and the student's emergency information."

Jones said the evacuation route is about one mile long, and the Riley County Police Department will help the students cross Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

TO THE POINT State standards should include evolution

Evolution theory should be a part of state science standards.

Kathy Martin, an unopposed candidate for the Kansas Board of Education, will speak tonight about her vision for the future at K-State. Part of the vision includes teaching creationism alongside evolution in classrooms, as well as eliminating evolution concepts from state standards.

In 1999, the board removed evolution from the standards, and that decision was reversed in 2001. Reverting back to the 1999 decision would delay students' education by putting them behind their peers.

The reason creationism is not taught in our classrooms is because it's not science. There is a place for creationism — in religious schools and churches.

Students should not open public school textbooks and see declarations of God's creation of Adam and Eve presented as equal to scientific theories. Intelligent design theories do not belong in public classrooms.

Evolution, however, is a scientific theory. Kansas students should not be denied the knowledge other students around the nation receive.

The state standards should be in place to ensure students are learning everything they need to succeed after high school, not to set a moral agenda.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Casting a vote of approval

Citizens should have a chance to judge slanted media messages

As October passes the halfway point, we find ourselves inching ever closer to the dreaded second of November. On this most special of days most of us will get to choose from guy we don't like A, guy we don't like B, or, if you're an idealist like myself, guy that no one has ever heard of C.

JONAS HOGG

Now, if this was an informed society it would consist largely of people re-examining their candidate, voting records, stances on sensitive issues, etc. Sadly, though, it becomes increasingly obvious the majority could care less about the issues.

What I get from the little snippets of news I see is that most people would rather pluck their eyebrows with a grizzly bear than listen for one shadow of a second to the "other" candidate.

So instead of a healthy political dialogue we wind up with taxpayer-funded name-calling and crappy movies that accuse the "other" candidate of being fat and smelling like old feet.

But to many, even this mockery of politics is simply too much to take. So instead of encouraging discussion, which is what we should be doing in case anyone is confused, we now try to run interference whenever the "other" side says anything.

While the right did have their low moments during the hype surrounding the vaunted "Fahrenheit 9/11," it seems the left is determined to outdo them when it comes to shouting the other guy down.

From vigorous complaining about "Swift Boat Veterans for Truth" to the now vigorous assault on the new anti-Kerry film "Stolen Honor," it seems those in the non-Bush camp are quickly crying foul, whereas in Michael Moore's case they were crying Oscar.

Take the recent vigorous assault on Sinclair Broadcasting as an example. All sorts of ideas from a boycott of Sinclair's advertisers to writing nasty letters have popped up as a means to coerce the broadcast group to cancel its showing of "Stolen Honor."

I find it humorous to no end that increasingly the "free-thinkers" think the only way that this society can operate is to censor the other side.

This peculiar brand of "more freedom for me, less freedom for thee" cannot lead us to anywhere pleasant.

Nevertheless, many people seemed determined to forgo that bothersome First Amendment so they can spread their word to the rest of us, who are simply too stupid to reach their conclusion by ourselves.

But this is the sad state of politics in our country. We shout praise when our guy flings mud, but when the opponent grabs a fist full of their own, we spew fire and brimstone.

Here is a brilliant idea for all those who wish to become real free-thinkers and not the kind with quotation marks. Go watch "Stolen Honor," watch "Fahrenheit 9/11," watch the Swift Vets commercials. If it's crap, come to your own decision that it's crap and forget you ever saw it.

But come to your own conclusion, form your own decisions. If your entire voting thought process consists of "this is how Michael Moore/Swift Vet Bob told me to vote," do us all a favor. Stay home Nov. 2.

Myth of liberal media bias misleading

Last week, the Sinclair Broadcast Group announced that each of its 62 stations across America will air an anti-Kerry special titled, "Stolen Honor: Wounds That Never Heal."

Coincidentally, the special airs two weeks before the Nov. 2 election.

How convenient. You also might recall a little incident from April 30, when the same Sinclair Group refused to broadcast an episode of Nightline that read the names of every U.S. soldier killed in Iraq.

Sinclair claimed the episode was "motivated by a political agenda" (interesting hypocrisy, considering the aforementioned anti-Kerry documentary), and that honoring those who died in combat would "undermine the efforts of the United States in Iraq."

There's that liberal media at it again! Oh wait, I forgot. The "liberal media bias" is nothing more than a paranoid hallucination purported by Republicans with their panties in a bundle. Read on.

The Sinclair folks are not the only example of conservative conglomerates hogging the airwaves.

Ever heard of a bloke named Rupert Murdoch? According to completely official reports, Murdoch's evil empire (creatively named The News Corporation) owns 100 percent of the freaking universe.

Murdoch owns DirecTV, 20th Century Fox, 175 newspapers worldwide (175!), and, of course, the infamous Fox News.

Yes, Fox News — the feather in the cap of the Murdoch's colossal conglomerate is the station that brought you conservative blowhards like Sean Hannity, Neil Cavuto, Brit Hume and everyone's favorite creepy uncle, Bill O'Reilly.

So if the conservative conglomerates Sinclair and News Corporation own this many news outlets, where is this liberal media everyone keeps harping about?

Is it ABC? Can't be, since the puppeteer pulling ABC's strings is Disney, and they recently refused to distribute "Fahrenheit 9/11" because it "wasn't in the interest of the company."

Is it GE-owned NBC? Probably not, since they're the proud parents of MSNBC, which features such unbiased commentators as former Congressman Joe Scarborough (R-Fl) and arch-conservative kook Pat Buchanan.

I've got it. It's CBS. After all, this is the network that was busted for that Rattergate fiasco, right?

Right. But this is also the network that refused to air a commercial critical of President Bush during the Super Bowl. Instead, they opted to show an ad sent directly from the White House insinuating that if you've ever smoked a doob, you helped fund terror.

Try for one second to divorce yourself from the constant claims of a liberal media, and answer something for me.

Question: Who keeps complaining about the supposed liberal media?

Answer: The media.

For some reason, conservatives refuse to wrap their minds around the painfully obvious point that if there truly was a leftist slant, you'd never hear about it in the media. It would be contradictory to their evil, liberal master plan.

No matter what arguments these fabricators are presented with, they stubbornly refuse to listen.

It's funny how quickly they'll change the subject when you bring up that pesky "radio" part of the media. They know there's a better chance of meeting Richard Simmons, Jr., than finding a liberal in mainstream radio, so they conveniently ignore it because it doesn't jibe with their paranoid conspiracy.

Finally, even the Collegian can't escape the "liberal rag" cries. Apparently, these accusers have never heard of Grant Reichert or James Hurla.

Apparently, these people didn't notice that on April 22, 2003, the Collegian ran a 12-page anti-abortion ad titled, "The Silent Epidemic."

How very liberally biased! Despite what fire-breathing conservative shrew Ann Coulter would like you to believe, "the public square" is not "wall-to-wall liberal propaganda."

If it were, conservative conglomerates wouldn't own every TV station under the sun. Conservatives wouldn't completely dominate radio.

And this paper wouldn't print the anti-me Forum calls that are sure to follow by people who, predictably, refused to listen to any of the facts presented here.

Center's Safe Zone educates community

By Jatin Srivastava
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Women's Center has started the Safe Zone program to make the campus community more aware and proactive about victimization, hateful acts and GLBT (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender) issues.

Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center said violence can't be stopped completely but becoming proactive can help.

"Even if we help every single victim who has suffered, we won't be able to stop the violence. So we have become more proactive, and we are stepping out and trying to empower people to stop these tendencies at the source itself."

Mary Todd, assistant director of the Women's Center, said the recent activities involve campus cultures changing efforts such as nonviolence education and programs directed to men.

Todd said the Safe Zone program is growing. There are close to 200 "Safe Zones" on campus, places where one can expect a knowledgeable, nonjudgmental individual to offer help in a caring way.

Faculty, staff and students can take the training. Faculty and staff will have the Safe Zone logo on their door and students can put the safe zone button on their backpacks. The training for becoming the Safe Zone ally has two phases.

The first training provides primary crisis intervention information. The advanced training focuses more deeply on one specific topic.

Susana Valdovinos, associate director of affirmative action, who also is involved with the Safe Zone advanced training program, said there was a climate study for women in 2001 where they expressed the need for the Safe Zone concept.

"There was a campaign for nonviolence where we planned to revitalize the Safe Zone concept at K-State. As we couldn't ask people to contribute much of their time, we developed a training format which gave them an overview of the issues," she said.

Wendy Lanter, a senior in family life and community service, said she first came to know about the program when she visited the Women's Center and asked about volunteer opportunities. She said that if every case of victimization were reported, there would be an article in the Collegian every day.

"The most important thing I learned while at the training was the number of referrals that I had been previously unaware of," she said. "I now know that for any problem a student is having, there are so many offices that will reach out and help that student in any way they can."

"The amount of resources is amazing. I've been at K-State for over four years now, and some of the referrals I learned about at the Safe Zone training I never knew even existed. With all of the materials that were given out, I feel more prepared to handle these issues. If I feel I can't handle them personally, I at least now know where to refer that student," Lanter said.

Lanter said she thinks more people should know about the Safe Zone program.

"The only suggestion I have is that this program should be more publicized to ensure that interested participants could attend if they wanted to. I'm sure many more would get involved if only they knew about it."

Todd said the training today will focus on hateful acts while the Nov. 1 training will focus on GLBT issues.

Community service week plans under way

By Ashley Friesen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The staff members of the Community Service Program are busy preparing for the fifth annual National Community Service Week, which begins Friday.

The event will kick-off at the College Hill Preschool where volunteers will prepare the school to be painted Friday.

This year's service week is a celebration of the National Make-A-Difference Day and will feature a number of service projects throughout the week.

Community Service Week is a great way for K-State students to get out in their community and contribute skills, time and expertise, said Carol Gould, director of the Community Service Program.

"We have wonderful volunteerism, and we have a community with a lot of needs," Gould said. "It's important for us as a campus to show our dedication to civic engagement — getting involved in the community, showing that the campus cares about the community where it resides."

The goal of the project is to encourage the development of relationships between the university and social service agencies in Manhattan. American VISTA representative, Tori Collins said.

"Everyone can collaborate, and everyone can be a part of a community where service is the main focus," Collins said.

The service week will accomplish this goal and will benefit the Manhattan community and participants as well.

"We perceive the community around us as a typical college town where you don't see on our streets a lot of people without homes, and the people who are hungry are not as visible in our community as in urban areas. But they're here," Gould said.

"We need to be aware of those issues right here, and we need to make those connections."

In order to help students make those connections, the Community Service Program has created service opportunities for students with various social service agencies in Manhattan including the Boys and Girls Club, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, Manhattan Arts Center and the Manhattan Emergency Shelter.

While these agencies benefit from service, participants have the opportunity to reap the rewards of volunteering.

"Is important because it helps with personal growth and development, intellectual and social growth and development," Collins said. "It allows students to explore new roles and identities within new communities."

Collins said it is not enough to only volunteer, but people should understand their role as a citizen.

"Citizens have responsibility in communities," Gould said.

"We have responsibilities to make our communities good places in which to live."

Amy Robinson, community service chair for Bilingual Education Student Organization, chose to participate in the activities of the week.

"I think it is important to serve the community you're in and the people around you," Robinson said.

"I think community service sticks with you forever. It's always in you to help people."

Robinson is excited to kick off the week at the College Hill Preschool in preparation for painting on Friday, which has been deemed the Ruth Ann Wefald Day of Service by the program.

Wefald will be on-site to help volunteers paint the school.

Sign-ups for projects are available through the Community Service Office in Holton Hall throughout the week as they seek to put to work as many volunteers as they can.

Netters snap two-match skid at Texas Tech

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team got back on track Saturday, sweeping Texas Tech 3-0 on the road to end a two-match losing skid.

No. 16 K-State won the match 30-28, 30-16 and 30-24 to improve to 12-6 overall and 6-3 in the Big 12 Conference. The Red Raiders dropped to 7-8 and 3-6 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she was pleased with several things the Wildcats did to get the win.

"Defensively we played very well," Fritz said. "We blocked well. We dug a lot of balls and converted some points in transition. I thought we had a lot of bright spots."

The Wildcats returned to the win column after losing to Texas and Nebraska last week. After struggling to finish games in the Nebraska match, Fritz said her squad improved in that aspect.

"We got better as the match went on," Fritz said. "Our hitting percentage went up, and I thought we played with discipline. We did have some missed serves at times when you just can't miss a serve, but other than that, it was a very nice win for us against a good team. Texas Tech is unpredictable; they run a very fast set offensively and can be difficult to defend."

The Wildcats were led by sophomore middle blocker Joy Hamlin's near double-double of 10 kills on .450 hitting along with eight blocks.

Fritz said Hamlin was a force both offensively and defensively.

"Joy played very well on both sides of the ball," Fritz said. "She blocked well and got into good spots in transition so we could set her. She was very good tonight."

Junior outside hitter Agata Rezende added another 10 kills and seniors, setter Gabby Guerre and middle blocker Lisa Martin, contributed to K-State's team block total of 13 with six and five blocks, respectively. The Wildcats' blocking helped force 31 Texas Tech hitting errors, as they held the Red Raiders to just .016 hitting on the match.

Guerre also had 36 assists and 11 digs to notch her second straight double-double. Freshman libero Angie Lastra had her 17th 10-plus dig performance of the 18-match season, finishing with 18.

Next up for the Wildcats is Baylor, with the Bears coming for a 7 p.m. match on Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats show season still offers promise

JOSH WITT

Moral victories suck. People usually say something is a "moral victory" when they're desperately searching for positives following a heart-breaking loss.

Most of the time, I hate the term. A loss is a loss, so deal with it and don't try to sugar-coat it.

That being said, K-State's 31-21 loss to No. 2 Oklahoma was about the closest thing you could have to a moral victory if there is such a thing.

Oklahoma was supposed to come into KSU Stadium and tear apart a struggling K-State squad, avenging last season's Wildcat win in the Big 12 Championship game.

It didn't happen.

For three quarters, the Wildcats gave the Sooners all they could handle, showing a national-television audience that the K-State football team hasn't thrown in the towel on a disappointing season.

Coach Bill Snyder surprised many Saturday, making sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier and the Wildcat passing attack the focal point of the game plan and not senior running back Darren Sproles.

Snyder and the offensive coaches said after the game they hadn't planned before the game to throw as much as Meier did — 38 attempts — and run Sproles so little — 13 carries.

I'm not sure I buy that, but regardless, it was a beautiful strategy.

Meier looked very crisp in the first half, throwing for 153 yards and a 38-yard touchdown strike to sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs.

In the second half, Meier wasn't quite as smooth, but can you fault him?

The poor guy took a beating all day long that seemed to get more severe by the play, eventually resulting in his getting knocked out — literally — in the fourth quarter.

I don't know about you all, but the more I think of Meier, Figurs and Jermaine Moreira only being sophomores —

Wildcats hold freshman standout to just 26 yards in first half

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From the beginning, the pressure was on the K-State defense to stop the high-powered offense of No. 2 Oklahoma, and through the first 35 minutes of play Saturday, the Wildcats held their own.

In their first two defensive series, the Wildcats (2-4, 0-3) forced Oklahoma (6-0, 3-0) to punt, before giving up a game-tying touchdown on the Sooners' third possession.

In the first half, the K-State defense forced Oklahoma to either punt or settle for a field-goal attempt in four of the Sooners' first seven possessions of the game, and the Wildcats held the Big 12 Conference's third-leading rushing team to just 38 yards on the ground.

"I think our youngsters played hard, and there was more spirit," Coach Bill Snyder said. "There was some fight to them, but it wasn't enough."

Like the first half, the Wildcat defense came out on fire in the second half.

Junior defensive end Scott Edmonds blocked a field-goal attempt by the Sooners on their first possession, and sophomore linebacker Brandon Archer intercepted a pass for a touchdown on Oklahoma's next possession, but the Sooners offense would prove to be too much for K-State.

After the interception, the Sooners were able to convert on 50 percent of their third down chances and freshman running back sensation Adrian Peterson got back on track after only rushing for 26 yards in the first half.

"Like every opponent we play, we try and stop the run first," defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. "We tried to get them in third-down situations and then do a couple of things differently and for the most part that worked, but they have great weapons all over the field."

Despite its struggles in the first half, the

NASCAR | Busch hanging on to points lead

If Kurt Busch goes on to win his first NASCAR title, he can point to the 500 miles at Lowe's Motor Speedway as the defining race of his season.

Busch rallied from a fender-bender in practice, a wreck on the first lap of the race, battled with a temperamental car and avoided two near disasters.

All in a day's work for Busch, who emerged from the UAW-GM Quality 500 on Saturday night with a fourth-place finish and his lead in the points standings intact.

That Busch and his Roush Racing team were able to survive and leave Charlotte with a 24-point lead over Dale Earnhardt Jr. in the standings doesn't bode well for the rest of the Chase contenders.

He's somehow managed to avoid mistakes and overcome bad breaks through all five of the first 10 NASCAR playoff races. Busch has finished in the top 10 in each of the events and heads into the stretch run with victories on three of the remaining five tracks.

Third-place Chase driver Jeff Gordon had just as many problems as Busch, and he too came away with a strong finish. He ended up crossing the finish line in second place — right behind teammate Jimmie Johnson — and left Charlotte 74 points out of the lead.

MLB | Selig concerned over latest Bonds' allegations

Baseball commissioner Bud Selig expressed concern Saturday about fresh allegations that Barry Bonds used performance-enhancing drugs in 2003 and said they are further cause for a tougher policy on steroid use to avoid tarnishing the game.

Selig told reporters at the American League championship series game in Boston that a San Francisco Chronicle story based on a tape recording purportedly of Bonds' trainer is "just a further manifestation of why we need a very strict steroid policy. Until we have one, we'll have this kind of situation."

The Chronicle obtained an anonymous source a 9-minute recording it said was of Bonds' trainer Greg Anderson, one of four people charged in a steroid scandal involving a Bay area nutritional supplements firm.

The speaker on the tape is heard saying Bonds used an "undetectable" performance-enhancing drug during the 2003 season and boasting that he would be tipped off up to two weeks before random drug testing, the newspaper said. Bonds has denied taking steroids.

Culbertson paces women, Wildcat men continue to improve

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Trisha Culbertson smashed her season-best time in the 6K as the K-State women's cross country team finished ninth at the Chile Pepper Invitational on Saturday.

Culbertson ran a time of 22:02 and placed 34th overall to lead the Wildcats. Her time was 5:05 faster than her previous best of the season, which she set at the Wildcat Invitational last month.

Culbertson said she worked more on her race technique with the course being flatter than other courses the Wildcats have seen this season.

"I just tried to run a steadier race," Culbertson said. "I wanted to run harder at the end of the race as opposed to going out too fast and dying at the end."

Junior Christina Lara and senior Shauna Burrell followed Culbertson as they finished 54th and 56th, respectively. Burrell also recorded her season-best time, completing the course in 22:40.

Culbertson said the ninth-place team finish was upsetting, but she was still confident the team can achieve its goals.

"If you ask any of us today, we would say we could have all run a lot better," Culbertson said. "But we're still learning. It was a good wake up, and it shows us just how much effort we're really going to have to put out there at the conference meet. I think we can do it."

The ninth-place finish was the first time this season the women's team finished outside the top-five, but the field of 31 teams was considerably stronger than the other meets K-State had competed in this season. Southern Methodist, the No. 11 ranked team, came away with the win Saturday.

Overall, Coach Michael Smith said the team's showing was not anything spectacular.

"We had some pretty good performances, and then we had some performances that were expected," Smith said. "We didn't really exceed expectations. It was an average performance for our women. Trisha ran what she is capable of running, and I want to get out there that Christina Lara is coming along quite nicely."

The U.N.I.T. releases latest mix of jazz, hip hop in town

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan jazz/hip-hop band the U.N.I.T. released its first LP, "The Brown Note," Friday night to an enthusiastic audience at PJ's Restaurant and Pub.

"The Brown Note" is a 10-track album that includes "The Underground Sound," which is a commentary on the current state of radio and television.

The lyrics include the following: "What's with all the music today / it's all the same, so mundane / and it's so cliché, I mean hey / where's the musicianship?"

"It's a pretty catchy song," said Aaron Graversen, vocalist and tenor sax and flute player. "The fact it's an anti-radio and television song is pretty funny."

Both the album's production and the cover art were done by band members. Kelly McCarty, bass player, produced the album, and it is the first time he mixed an album.

"I had watched the producers in previous bands I've been in and asked a lot of questions," he said. "As far as the actual mixing, I got feedback from everyone whose opinions matter."

Matt Williams, keyboards, trumpet and vocals, designed the liner notes. He said he took photos then used Adobe Photoshop to extract the pictures and Adobe Illustrator to design the layout.

"Me and Kel were really the only people who could do it, and he was in charge of mixing, and I didn't want him to have to pull double duty," he said.

"One of the nice things is we're able to add a lot of things we're not able to do in a performance," Williams said.

In the summer of 2003 the band released the demo, "Just a Taste."

Except for Williams, sophomore in kinesiology, all of the band members are either music composition or music education majors. Aaron Graversen, senior in music education, said since the release of "Just a Taste," the band has been working to become a more cohesive unit.

"We've all been studying and applying what we've learned," he said.

The band has no plans to tour in the immediate future due to busy school schedules, but hope to hit all the local cities next semester.

McCarty said the album's title is an inside joke.

"We spent three months going over possible titles, and we were self-titling it," he said. "It's not a revelation by any means, but as long as it makes me laugh, I'm able to stand it."

The band also includes Ryan Kazmaier, baritone, alto and soprano saxophones, and Matt Leifer, drums.

Keyboard player and vocalist, Matt Williams works through a set during The U.N.I.T.'s performance Friday night at PJ's. Williams is a sophomore in kinesiology.

Tommy Lee plays with college marching band

Drummer Tommy Lee has played plenty of stadium shows with his band Motley Crue. But none was quite like his performance with the University of Nebraska marching band before 77,881 red-clad football fans.

"Oh yeah, it's real different," Lee said of Saturday's halftime show at the Baylor-Nebraska game in Memorial Stadium. "That was awesome, absolutely great."

Lee

Lee is in Lincoln filming a prospective NBC-TV reality show in which he takes classes at Nebraska including chemistry and history of rock 'n' roll.

He tried out for the marching band's drum line earlier in the week.

Lee, 42, joined the band in the stands in full uniform, playing along with other drummers, a broad smile on his face.

Lee took part in the band's Latin music halftime show, playing a rack of five tom-toms carried on his shoulders.

Moore's pre-election TV special nixed

A cable pay-per-view company has decided not to show a three-hour election eve special with filmmaker

Michael Moore that included a showing of his documentary "Fahrenheit 9/11," which is sharply critical of President Bush.

Moore

The company, IN DEMAND, said Friday that its decision is due to "legitimate business and legal concerns." A spokesman would not elaborate.

Moore just released his movie on DVD and was seeking a TV outlet for the film.

Moore said Friday he signed a contract with the company in early September and is considering legal action. He said he believes IN DEMAND decided not to air the film because of pressure from "top Republican people."

In a statement, IN DEMAND said any legal action Moore might take against the company would be "entirely baseless and groundless."

Also Friday, Moore offered to let Sinclair Broadcast Group Inc. air the movie for free. Such a deal would likely get a chilly reception at Sinclair, a broadcaster with a reputation for conservative politics that plans to air a critical documentary about John Kerry's anti-Vietnam War activities on dozens of TV stations two weeks before the election.

De Niro explains absences in Italy

Actor Robert De Niro said "serious communications problems" led him to miss two appearances in Italy.

"It was a complicated situation and I'm not sure how it was handled on their end, but it certainly wasn't handled properly at mine," De Niro said in a statement issued Friday by his publicist.

"I was a guest in their country, and the last thing I would want to do is to offend anyone," the statement said.

The Italian-American actor was to receive the Golden Ambrosius award, which takes its name from Milan's patron saint Ambrose, on Thursday from the mayor of Milan. De Niro's publicist said the actor arrived late and the officials did not wait for him.

Milan Mayor Gabriele Albertini, who said he waited 40 minutes, said the actor's failure to pick up the award was "an incredible display of bad manners."

K-State alum brings acting tips to alma mater

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eric Stonestreet has been freaked out by Frances McDormand and thought he was trimming Donovan McNabb's bush.

Stonestreet is a K-State alumnus who has been a professional actor in Los Angeles for six years, had such roles as the desk clerk in "Almost Famous," Ronnie Little in "CSI" and the guy who tries to bribe the Philadelphia Eagles' quarterback for football tickets in a credit card commercial.

He answered questions, provided encouragement and advice for theater students Friday afternoon.

"You gotta believe 'I'm freakin' talented' and if you don't, why bother," he told the crowd.

Stonestreet said the opportunity to impart what he's learned as exciting.

"It makes me feel good to give someone one nugget that'll sustain them in an industry that's very difficult," he said. "For seniors going into acting they need to hear the truth."

For the students in the audience, hearing firsthand about life in Los Angeles was a great opportunity.

"They can do their best to teach us whatever we're doing, but actually going out there and doing it is a completely different thing," said Paul Creekmore, senior in theater and electrical engineering.

When Creekmore told Stonestreet his majors, Stonestreet told him the name of a friend who is an actor and an engineer for the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

"The most important thing for me is how do these things go together," Creekmore said. "The fact he knows someone who works for the Jet Propulsion Laboratory and is in the entertainment industry is amazing."

"Knowing someone else is doing this is good to hear."

Stonestreet graduated from

K-State in 1996 and spent the next two years doing improvisational comedy and plays in Chicago before moving to L.A. This was the second time he returned to K-State since graduation and his first since moving to L.A.

Stonestreet came to Manhattan to see the football game against the University of Oklahoma, and asked the theater department what they wanted him to do. He stayed in the basement of Charlotte MacFarland, professor of theater, while in town.

"He's a really neat human being and has a sense of humor about himself," she said. "He proves you can be nice and still be successful in L.A."

Stonestreet said his role in Cameron Crowe's film from 2000 "Almost Famous," meant the most to him.

"I was in a memorable scene," he said. "That gave me credibility and I'm able to stand out, which is good."

However, he said his best role is one he hasn't even auditioned for.

"It's like building a wall and each role is a brick in that wall."

Netters snap two-match skid at Texas Tech

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team got back on track Saturday, sweeping Texas Tech 3-0 on the road to end a two-match losing skid.

No. 16 K-State won the match 30-28, 30-16 and 30-24 to improve to 12-6 overall and 6-3 in the Big 12 Conference. The Red Raiders dropped to 7-8 and 3-6 in the Big 12.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she was pleased with several things the Wildcats did to get the win.

"Defensively we played very well," Fritz said. "We blocked well. We dug a lot of balls and converted some points in transition. I thought we had a lot of bright spots."

The Wildcats returned to the win column after losing to Texas and Nebraska last week. After struggling to finish games in the Nebraska match, Fritz said her squad improved in that aspect.

"We got better as the match went on," Fritz said. "Our hitting percentage went up, and I thought we played with discipline. We did have some missed serves at times when you just can't miss a serve, but other than that, it was a very nice win for us against a good team. Texas Tech is unpredictable; they run a very fast set offensively and can be difficult to defend."

The Wildcats were led by sophomore middle blocker Joy Hamlin's near double-double of 10 kills on .450 hitting along with eight blocks.

Fritz said Hamlin was a force both offensively and defensively.

"Joy played very well on both sides of the ball," Fritz said. "She blocked well and got into good spots in transition so we could set her. She was very good tonight."

Junior outside hitter Agata Rezende added another 10 kills and seniors, setter Gabby Guerre and middle blocker Lisa Martin, contributed to K-State's team block total of 13 with six and five blocks, respectively. The Wildcats' blocking helped force 31 Texas Tech hitting errors, as they held the Red Raiders to just .016 hitting on the match.

Guerre also had 36 assists and 11 digs to notch her second straight double-double. Freshman libero Angie Lastra had her 17th 10-plus dig performance of the 18-match season, finishing with 18.

Next up for the Wildcats is Baylor, with the Bears coming for a 7 p.m. match on Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats show season still offers promise

Moral victories suck. People usually say something is a "moral victory" when they're desperately searching for positives following a heart-breaking loss.

Most of the time, I hate the term. A loss is a loss, so deal with it and don't try to sugar-coat it.

That being said, K-State's 31-21 loss to No. 2 Oklahoma was about the closest thing you could have to a moral victory if there is such a thing.

Oklahoma was supposed to come into KSU Stadium and tear apart a struggling K-State squad, avenging last season's Wildcat win in the Big 12 Championship game.

It didn't happen.

For three quarters, the Wildcats gave the Sooners all they could handle, showing a national-television audience that the K-State football team hasn't thrown in the towel on a disappointing season.

Coach Bill Snyder surprised many Saturday, making sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier and the Wildcat passing attack the focal point of the game plan and not senior running back Darren Sproles.

Snyder and the offensive coaches said after the game they hadn't planned before the game to throw as much as Meier did — 38 attempts — and run Sproles so little — 13 carries.

I'm not sure I buy that, but regardless, it was a beautiful strategy.

Meier looked very crisp in the first half, throwing for 153 yards and a 38-yard touchdown strike to sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs.

In the second half, Meier wasn't quite as smooth, but can you fault him?

The poor guy took a beating all day long that seemed to get more severe by the play, eventually resulting in his getting knocked out — literally — in the fourth quarter.

I don't know about you all, but the more I think of Meier, Figurs and Jermaine Moreira only being sophomores —

Wildcats hold freshman standout to just 26 yards in first half

From the beginning, the pressure was on the K-State defense to stop the high-powered offense of No. 2 Oklahoma, and through the first 35 minutes of play Saturday, the Wildcats held their own.

In their first two defensive series, the Wildcats (2-4, 0-3) forced Oklahoma (6-0, 3-0) to punt, before giving up a game-tying touchdown on the Sooners' third possession.

In the first half, the K-State defense forced Oklahoma to either punt or settle for a field-goal attempt in four of the Sooners' first seven possessions of the game, and the Wildcats held the Big 12 Conference's third-leading rushing team to just 38 yards on the ground.

"I think our youngsters played hard, and there was more spirit," Coach Bill Snyder said. "There was some fight to them, but it wasn't enough."

Like the first half, the Wildcat defense came out on fire in the second half.

Junior defensive end Scott Edmonds blocked a field-goal attempt by the Sooners on their first possession, and sophomore linebacker Brandon Archer intercepted a pass for a touchdown on Oklahoma's next possession, but the Sooners offense would prove to be too much for K-State.

After the interception, the Sooners were able to convert on 50 percent of their third down chances and freshman running back sensation Adrian Peterson got back on track after only rushing for 26 yards in the first half.

"Like every opponent we play, we try and stop the run first," defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said. "We tried to get them in third-down situations and then do a couple of things differently and for the most part that worked, but they have great weapons all over the field."

the increased emphasis on the passing game and the reduced role of Sproles was the product of taking what the Oklahoma defense was giving K-State.

"You try to keep them a little bit off-balance," Miller said. "We probably didn't throw the ball all year long on first down, and today we almost opened every time, which keeps defenses a little bit off balance and hopefully makes you unpredictable."

Sproles finished the game with just 34 yards on 13 carries, though he did score his 40th career touchdown in the first quarter, tying him with former K-State quarterback Ell Roberson for the school career touchdown record.

On defense, the Wildcats put together perhaps their best performance of the year for the majority of the game.

Oklahoma standout freshman running back Adrian Peterson was held to 26 yards on 14 carries in the first half.

Snyder said he saw better tackling at times from his defense.

"There was a number of times we got him (Peterson) flush up, and got him wrapped up with our arms and bent him over backwards, and there were times he bent us over backwards," Snyder said.

Junior linebacker Marvin Simmons led the team with 13 tackles. Archer had 10 tackles in addition to his interception and senior defensive end Kevin Huntley sacked senior Oklahoma quarterback Jason White once and recorded two tackles for a loss.

However, Oklahoma was able to wear down the K-State defense, as White – who finished with 256 yards passing and four touchdowns – put the Wildcats away by connecting with senior wide receiver Mark Clayton twice in the second half on touchdown passes after K-State took the lead.

Peterson also picked up his play late in the second half and finished with 36 carries for 130 yards.

Because of its third-straight loss, K-State faces the very real possibility of not making a bowl game for the first time since 1992.

The Wildcats also are faced with another potential injury to Meier, who left the game in the fourth quarter after one of many big hits he took on the day. Snyder did not comment on Meier's status but did say the quarterback got "knocked around a little bit."

Senior center Mike Johnson said the team needs to look to past successful Wildcat teams for inspiration heading into the season's final five regular-season games.

"Basically, we have to start out at our foundation and look at what's happened in the past and how these teams in the past have gotten where they were," Johnson said. "And it really just starts with work ethic and discipline and things out there on the practice field."

With K-State preparing for this Saturday's home clash with rival Nebraska, Miller said team morale should not be a problem.

"We've got fighters," Miller said. "We've got a head coach who's a fighter. That may be the most important thing because he's a fighter, and they'll follow him."

Quarterback Dylan Meier struggles to get by Oklahoma defensive end Jonathan Jackson during the third quarter of Saturday's game against the Sooners. The Cats lost the battle to Oklahoma, 31-21.

OKLAHOMA Wildcat defense 'making strides'

Sooner offense went back to the running game in the second half, and Peterson took control, gaining 104 yards on 22 carries.

"That's a sign of a good back, and if you have a horse, you want to keep feeding him," senior cornerback Cedrick Williams said.

Snyder said opponents' third-down conversion ratios have been an Achilles' heel for his defense.

"That's been one of the issues we've had over the course of the year, and it jumps us and bites us again," Snyder said. "We've got to be a better third-down football team, but saying it is one thing and doing it is another."

Although the Wildcat defense gave up 30 or more points for the third-straight game and allowed at least 360 yards of total offense for the fourth-straight game, Elliott said the defense is making strides.

"I thought it was a great effort," Elliott said. "For the most part our guys fought and scrapped and clawed and made some stops when they had to, so I think we can build on that."

goosebumps.

Now, the offense's solid performance against an Oklahoma team that shutout Texas the prior week didn't completely surprise me – I've thought highly of our passing game since game one.

The defense was another story.

To someone who didn't watch the whole game and just looked at the post-game stats, it would appear Oklahoma had its way with the Wildcat defense.

Freshman running back Adrian Peterson: 130 yards rushing. Senior quarterback Jason White: 256 yards passing and four touchdowns.

That doesn't look good, but numbers can be deceiving.

The fact is the K-State defense played its best game of the year.

Wildcat defenders wrapped up. They pressured the quarterback at times. They stuffed the run.

And the Wildcats did all this against an offense featuring a returning Heisman Trophy winner in White and my vote for best running back in the nation, Peterson.

The K-State defense did eventually wear down in the fourth quarter, as Peterson racked up 64 of his 130 yards on the ground. But considering the Sooners started a majority of their offensive drives in great field position due to turnovers and poor special teams' play, the defense should be applauded for standing its ground the way it did.

I hate moral victories. In talking with several Wildcats after the game, they don't believe in them much either.

However, Saturday's game showed how good this team can still be this season.

The Big 12 North Division is horrible. Anybody can win it, including K-State.

If the Wildcats perform like they did for the majority of the Oklahoma game and if Meier can stay healthy (a big, big if), they could realistically win their remaining five games.

Then we could see the Wildcats again battle the Sooners in Kansas City for the Big 12 Championship.

It's not that crazy of a notion – especially if the Wildcats can build off this "moral victory."

the 10-K race.

Roark said he felt his race went well considering the increased distance of the race.

"Personally, I feel I had a good race considering it's a little different strategy from the 8-K to the 10-K," Roark said. "It prepared me for regionals."

Smith said he liked the way his team continued its improvement, and he is pleased with the way the Wildcats have stepped up in recent weeks.

"Like the last race that we ran, we had lifetime bests out of every guy," Smith said. "They ran great. Almost to a man, they ran really well. They've done a great job of performing, knowing that Mathew isn't there to kind of lead the charge."

Now, the Wildcats turn their focus to the Big 12

Championships in two weeks. The meet will be held in Topeka, with K-State hosting.

Roark said the team will be rested and ready in two weeks.

"I think once we put Mathew back in we'll be a complete team," Roark said.

"We are going to put some finishing touches on our workouts, and it's going to be an intense two weeks. We'll be ready to go and ready to run well."

Coalition troops pound Fallujah

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — U.S. troops pounded the insurgent stronghold Fallujah with airstrikes and tank fire Sunday, and the Iraqi government appealed to residents of the city to expel "foreign terrorists" and "murderers" to prevent an all-out attack.

A mortar shell exploded Sunday at a Baghdad sports stadium minutes before Prime Minister Iyad Allawi arrived to inspect a cash-for-weapons program for Shiite fighters. Insurgents, meanwhile, ambushed and killed nine Iraqi policemen as they were returning home from a training course in Jordan.

Throughout the day, the crackle of automatic weapons fire and the thud of artillery echoed across Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad, as fighting between American troops and insurgents raged on the eastern and southern edges of the city, witnesses said.

Clashes blocked the main road leading to Baghdad, and plumes of smoke rose above the flat-roofed houses in the city's Askari and Shuhada neighborhoods in eastern and southern Fallujah.

Witnesses said a Humvee was seen burning in the eastern edge of the city, and hospital officials reported three civilians were killed. There was no casualty report from the U.S. military.

American forces have stepped up attacks around Fallujah since peace talks between the Iraqi government and Fallujah clerics broke down last Thursday after city leaders rejected Allawi's demand to hand over "foreign terrorists," including Jordanian-born extremist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

COMMANDMENTS | Justices' perspectives differ

conflicting decisions on the issue.

Of the two cases in front of the Supreme Court, one involves the same type of monolith donated by the Eagles. In that case, a homeless man in Austin, Texas, requested the monolith be removed from the grounds of the statehouse.

The other case, in Kentucky, involves a framed display of the commandments in two county courthouses.

According to the Associated Press, Chief Justice William

Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas have made it clear they would support the ability of governments to display the commandments. Justice John Paul Stevens said he would not.

A decision is expected by July.

Saying goodbye

Family, friends remember student at on-campus memorial

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In the last days of Barbara Meyer's life, her fiancé, Scott Minneman, surprised her by coming home from Washington, D.C., to celebrate her 20th birthday.

As Barbara stood in the kitchen talking to her sister LeAnn, Scott walked into the room.

"She ran to him and almost knocked him over," LeAnn said.

It is that kind of reception LeAnn imagines Barbara received in heaven.

Barbara, a senior in political science, was killed in a car accident Oct. 10. Friends and family remembered her at a campus memorial service Monday evening.

day evening.

"I think Barb in her 20 years of life did more than 80-year-olds," LeAnn said.

Barbara was the Collegian opinion editor, a CASA volunteer, president of Young Democrats and a Sunday School teacher at Westview Community Church. She was a member of the National Society of Collegiate Scholars, the Multicultural Student Honor Society and the Black Student Union.

This summer, Barbara was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in Boston and appeared on the front page of the Boston Globe.

Joseph Aistrup, head of the political science department, said that after returning from her trip Barbara had pictures taken with celebrities and had dinner with comedian Al Franken.

Aistrup said Barbara was persistent in her causes, left others with fond impressions and enjoyed life.

Barbara's family found that her Bible had been read so much it was held together with duct tape.

"Her life was a life that was lived with a heart of faith," Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said.

Laura Wood, who traveled with Barbara to China for a mission trip, said that even though she had so many great accomplishments in life, Barbara never let it go to her head.

"She always cared about other people, especially her family," Wood, junior in political science, said.

Sydney Carlin, a Kansas House representative, met Barbara as she campaigned for Carlin and attended Democratic meetings. It was Barbara, Carlin said, who convinced her some people are born leaders.

"She shows us the many, many things we can do because it came to her so naturally," she said.

Person after person told how Barbara touched their lives, whether it was with a smile or her political passion.

There were stories of Barbara challenging conservative members of the Manhattan High School debate team to political debates. Stories of witnessing Barbara and her fiancé saying grace before eating

2 reports of rape given to RCPD

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two rapes were reported over the weekend in Manhattan.

On Oct. 16, a rape was reported to Riley County Police Department, Lt. Kurt Moldrup said.

"It was reported as a rape, but after further investigation it was filed as a sexual battery," Moldrup said.

Rape, he said, requires penetration.

He said the victim, a 16-year-old female, was reportedly groped in the groin area by a 20-year-old suspect known to the victim.

Moldrup said the incident, which occurred in the north part of Manhattan, is still under investigation.

On Oct. 17, a rape was reported to the RCPD, though no further information was available at press time.

Soldier arrested in murder case

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Army officials confirmed Monday that a Fort Riley soldier was arrested this weekend for the murder of a Chicago store manager.

Spc. Pierre M. Cole, 22, of Chicago, was arrested in connection with a Chicago Police Department homicide investigation. He was arrested at the Blue Valley Trailer Court. Cole's bond was set at $1.5 million.

Cole was a member of the 1st Battalion, 34th Armor, 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division as a mechanic.

He came to Fort Riley in September 2002, however Cole was on leave when the Oct. 14 incident occurred, according to Army officials.

Officers also arrested Lee McGee, 37, during a traffic stop on Kansas Highway 177, south of Manhattan. Bond was set at $2 million.

The Chicago Police Department requested Riley County's assistance in the investigation into the murder of James Jung, 53, during a robbery on Thursday.

Chicago police arrested the manager of the Best Fit Clothing Store, Latorria Brown, 38, for the same murder.

According to a Chicago Tribune story, Cook County Assistant State Attorney Molly Riordan said Brown conspired with her boyfriend to rob the store.

Authorities said that Thursday evening the boyfriend and another man entered and after pretending to shop, both men shot Jung several times.

"He was just standing there, doing his job, when these guys just started shooting," Riordan said in The Tribune.

The two men took Jung's wallets and tried to open the cash register before leaving, according to police officers.

Brown made a deal with the men to receive half the money, Riordan said.

The case is still under investigation.

A number of Ft. Riley soldiers have been charged in different murder cases in the past few weeks. Sgts. Aaron R. Stanley, 22, and Eric J. Colvin, 23, were charged with two counts of murder in the shooting deaths of two soldiers in September in Clay County. All four soldiers were assigned to the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry. Stanley and Colvin were charged in Fort Riley military court last week.

Four other members of the same unit have been charged in Iraq with the murders of four Iraqi civilians.

CAMPUS PULSE

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

In a time when everyone and everything is being scrutinized, we in the media business need to be extra careful of what we write or print in our newspapers. As we saw a few weeks ago in the national news with the Dan Rather situation, this is becoming a serious issue in the journalism business.

Once something has been printed in a newspaper or magazine, it often is too late to right the damage that has been done. So with that, we in this field have to be extra careful when we print statements or quotes in the paper.

In a job that requires precision and accuracy, we at the Collegian have a tough job. Just because this is a student newspaper, we still need to be as accurate as any national newspaper is required to be.

The Collegian and other media outlets should be responsible enough to check out anything that they are not absolutely sure about.
As with any professional job, this process of verification is a tough and time consuming job, but it is very much worth it, especially when it can cause legal problems.

The Collegian has a copy editing process that gives the writers and columnists help in assuring that their stories are accurate and clear.

After a writer has written their story, they give their story to a desk editor.
This editor then reads and checks for spelling errors and the accuracy and flow of the story. Then the story is read and edited by a group of copy editors whose job is to look for mistakes before the paper is sent to the press. The managing editor and the editor in chief of the Collegian have the final look at the whole paper before it is printed.

All these steps are taken to limit the amount of mistakes in the paper, but even after all these steps are taken, there remains the possibility of inaccuracies occurring in the Collegian.

In the case that something incorrect or unclear is printed, the Collegian has a section on Page 2 called "Corrections and Clarifications" that we use to correct or clarify errors.

If the error is particularly significant, the Collegian may issue an apology along with a correction or clarification as soon as the error is discovered.

As you can see, we at the Collegian try very hard to make sure that we get the story right, but we are human, and we can make mistakes, too.

If you as a reader of the Collegian ever see that we have misprinted something or got a story wrong, no matter how big or small the error is, please e-mail the news editor, Sarah Rice, or call the Collegian office and speak with an editor and let them know of the mistake.

The issue will be investigated and if it is proven we made a mistake or error, a correction or clarification will be issued.

Competition offers variety of goods

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With newer stores such as Wal-Mart and Target in town, business competition is heavy. For some students, deciding where to shop is not an easy task.

"All businesses in Manhattan want to cater to the interests of its shoppers, especially college students," Mayor Brad Everett said. "Students matter a lot to our city and we want to see them happy."

Some Target employees said they agree.

"At our store, we do not have 'customer service,' but we have 'guest service,'" said Colin Crume, junior in political science and Target guest service team leader. "Our customers are our guests, and we want to be sure that they are satisfied."

From early training, employees are taught the main goal of Target is guest service, Crume said.

He said there is a lot encompassed in customer service. "When a guest is trying to find an item, we try to help them as quickly as possible."

Crume also said that when registers have even two customers waiting in line, they open up another checkout.

But to some customers, good customer service is not enough.

"Shopping is more than just an attractive store or good customer relations," said David Broxterman, sophomore in con-

"When I can buy a DVD, cookie dough, and a gun at the same store, you know that's convenience."

David Broxterman
SOPHOMORE IN CONSTRUCTION SCIENCE AND MANAGEMENT

struction science and management. "I want to shop where things are most convenient."

Wal-Mart is one of the few shopping centers in town that can provide quality food and house-ware at quality prices, Broxterman said.

Tasha Staab, freshman in horticulture therapy, said she agreed.

"If I do not need to grab some fresh food or if I am really shopping for a good deal, I will go to Target," she said. "Usually, I go to Wal-Mart, though."

Staab said the addition of more retail stores in the area around Target could cause her to shop at that location more often.

Broxterman said the variety of products offered by Wal-Mart is the reason for his shopping there.

"When I can buy a DVD, cookie dough, and a gun at the same store, you know that's convenience," Broxterman said.

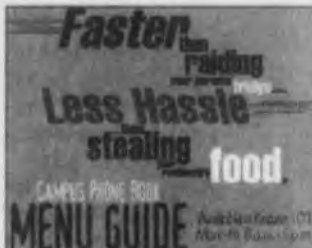

"That is why I am sticking with Wal-Mart."

TO THE POINT New meal plan benefits hall residents, guests

Bringing friends and families to campus can sometimes be a stressful experience, but a new program from Housing and Dining Services is making things a bit simpler.

As part of a new program, residents are allotted a number of free meal passes for guests based on the number of meals they pay for each week.

In the past, non-resident students, friends and family members were on their own or at the mercy of their hosts to pay for meals at the three dining centers on campus.

Preventing hunger in friends and family visiting campus will be much easier with the new program. It also leaves a good impression in the minds of those visitors who participate in the program and gives visitors a chase to get a taste of life on campus.

It is encouraging to see Housing and Dining respond to the desires of the Association of Residence Halls when the funds and initiative exist to make it happen.

Housing and Dining Services and other organizations should be open to the needs and desires of students and continue such good work when the opportunity presents itself in the future.

Learning to live without Ramadan fasting enhances life experience

ALTAT KARIM

If you never went through an experience of losing something important in your life, you may not be able to love losers.

If you were born with a gold spoon in your mouth and still describe yourself as a well-off person and never felt the pain of hunger, you might not be able to understand the sufferings of the poor and needy.

We live in the age of technology, but scientists are still unable to invent an instrument that motivates you to do something great for your fellow beings. People can connect themselves with others and can get motivation to do some thing valuable for others if they share the same kind of pain.

The good news is the God implanted exactly the same kind of pain-receiving sensors in all human brains, no matter richer or poorer, weaker or stronger. This mechanism connects people from entirely different social and economic backgrounds and brings the whole community together.

In human history, people from different schools of thought and philosophies have been performing hard practices like fasting, giving up material things or sacrificing some thing important in order to understand the sufferings of others, meanings of social justice and to overcome their lust and greed.

Ramadan, the Islamic month of fasting, provides a good example of these practices that help Muslims to become spiritually stronger.

It's also a time to strengthen family and community ties.

Following the sighting of the new crescent moon last Thursday, more than 1.6 billion Muslims around the world began observing one of their holiest seasons. Around 1,400 years ago this month, the Quran, the holy book of Islam, was revealed by God.

Ramadan is the ninth month of the lunar-based Islamic calendar. The lunar year is roughly 11 days shorter than the Gregorian calendar, which is used in the United States.

During this month, Muslims fast from dawn to sunset every day. Adult Muslims who are fasting give up things like any sort of food or drink, smoking, and sexual activities.

According to Islam, the physically or mentally unwell, young children, older people, those who are pregnant, breastfeeding, menstruating or traveling are not obliged to observe or practice fasting during this month.

Muslims not only abstain from physical things during this month but they also are expected to avoid bad thoughts and deeds as well. The core purpose of this religious practice is to achieve a high standard of morality by learning self-control and discipline and becoming spiritually stronger.

There are some other good reasons for the fast, for example, realizing the value of generosity and sharing fellowship with others by helping the needy and developing sympathy for them.

I am not a very religious person, but like many Muslims I have always been excited about Ramadan.

To me, fasting is an adventure. Surviving without food and water from dawn to dusk and repeating the same exercise every day boosts my self esteem and gives me a sense of spiritual accomplishment.

Secondly, I break the fast with Iraqi dates from Basra and Qehwa (Arabian tea). It provides me an enormous amount of energies. So when I will grow older, this habit of breaking the fast with dates and drinking energizing Qehwa will help me in saving money to support the poor instead of putting it in the pockets of Viagra sellers.

Third, fasting helped me to understand the real meanings of social justice and human relationships. Now I can overwhelmingly and more sympathetically advocate Victor Hugo's hungry hero in "Les Miserables," who broke the glass window and stole a piece of bread. Law and justice are entirely different things. Law perceived him as a violent terrorist and a thief. Consequently, he had to suffer in a jail for several years.

If you have no guts to break the glass window because you believe in nonviolence combined with the Kama Sutra and you also are anxiously interested in discovering the roots of violence and terrorism, I would suggest you to fast and make an attempt to give up fun activities just for few days.

You would be more concerned about people in Africa who are dying with hunger. You would have more sympathies with people who are dying around the world because of the lack of medicine.

You also would know that a religion can never support terrorism, but its roots lies under the heavy load of poverty around the world and miseries of economic sanctions that are imposed on poor and underdeveloped countries by rich nations.

United Nations should take action in Sudan

It is estimated that in 1994 nearly 800,000 humans were killed in acts of ethnic cleansing in Rwanda.

Sadly, as history played out, no one reacted to help stop this atrocity to humanity.

The United Nations was well aware of the genocide but did not act. In failing to act they destroyed a promise of "never again" that an entire generation made more than 50 years prior after the discovery of German atrocities.

At the close of the World War II, the allies worked to create the United Nations. One of its basic tenets was to help safeguard and promote human rights around the world.

According to National Public Radio, thus far in Sudan; nearly 50,000 have been killed by Islamic militants, 600 villages burned, and more than one million humans dislocated simply because one group of people did not like a certain other group.

So far, the United Nation's response has been token at best, and at worst, criminal.

The only action the United Nations has taken was to threaten to sanction Sudanese oil. That's right — they only threatened to take action.

Worst still, this occurs even as the United Nations should be moving closer to putting people on the ground, moving away from fulfilling their threat.

According to the Wall Street Journal, a special envoy to Sudan reported that conditions are not improving, and at the same time that the United Nations hears this they begin to shy away from their threat.

When the United Nations begins to border on inaction, it becomes nothing but an accessory to murder.

As a general rule, I dislike the United Nations. I see the United Nations as a vestigial organization, and without a major overhaul to make it relevant, one that bumbles from ill-fated attempts to help to another.

For heaven's sake, they have been trying to help Cambodia for decades, and they're still years away from accomplishing anything.

Unfortunately, in today's world I need throw off my realist opinions. You see, America needs the United Nations today more than ever.

As Foreign Policy magazine explains, the world in general and United States in specific need an effective United Nations to help maintain order, fight terrorism, and effectively deal problems that affect the world, such as poverty or disease.

While several things will have to be done before the United Nations is where it needs to be, the most immediate thing that needs to be done is to take action in Sudan. After ignoring Rwanda, failing to reign the United States over Iraq, and Iran and North Korea ignoring United Nations demands, the United Nations is bordering on irrelevance.

The first step for bringing the United Nations off the bench and back into the game is decisive action.

In the current Sudan crisis, the United Nations has a legitimate interest in acting, saving thousands of lives each year, and an opportunity to reestablish itself as a global leader and force.

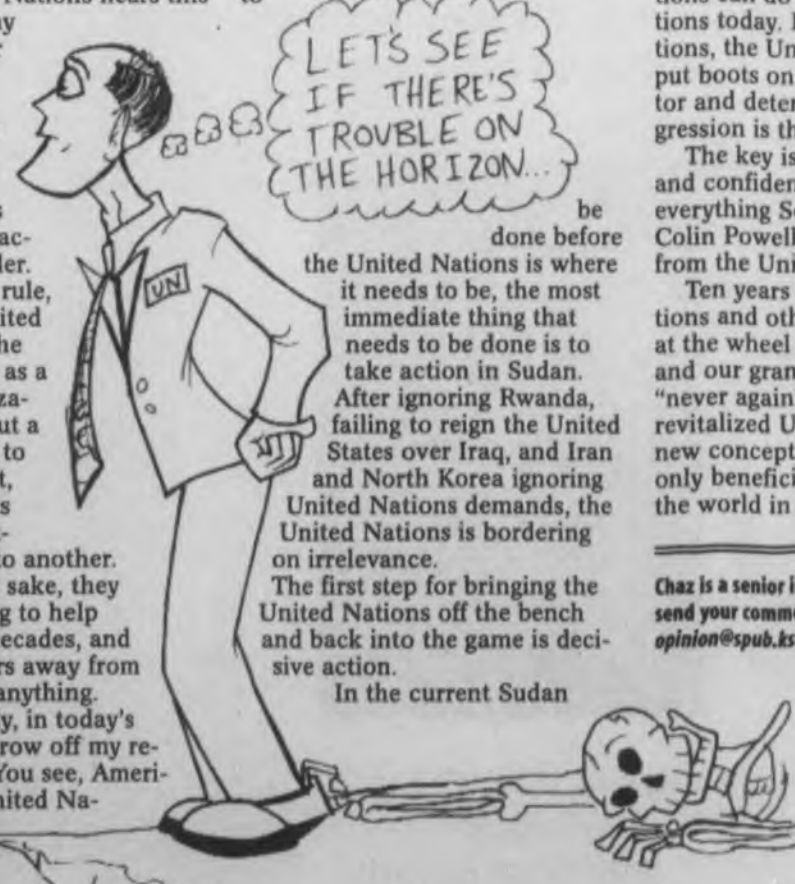

But empty threats just will not do. Direct and specific action is needed.

The first thing the United Nations can do is implement sanctions today. Following the sanctions, the United Nations could put boots on the ground to monitor and deter further ethnic aggression is the next step.

The key is speed, decisiveness and confidence — practically everything Secretary of State Colin Powell has been asking from the United Nations.

Ten years ago the United Nations and other nations fell asleep at the wheel regarding Rwanda, and our grandfathers' pledge of "never again" fell on deaf ears. A revitalized United Nations, with a new concept of that pledge is not only beneficial, but necessary in the world in which we live.

Mix Master Mike drops heavy beats

"Bangzilla"

Album review by Matt Groneman

Mix Master Mike is best known for his DJ work with the Beastie Boys, but he also makes music on his own. His newest album, "Bangzilla," is set to hit stores today.

The album provides some hard hitting beats but fails to do anything mind-blowing.

The album's 13 tracks flow flawlessly into each other, but that's probably more because they all sound like the Beatles' "Revolution No. 9" than because Mix Master Mike planned it that way.

Like "Revolution No. 9," there are many layers of samples over the beats. There are people counting, lines from old sci-fi movies that sound like something off of "Star Trek," and a little girl singing "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands." Spirituals, disco and Darth Vader also show up.

The layering of samples does show Mike's great skill as a DJ, but they seem to be placed more at random rather than placed in any meaningful progression.

This does not mean the album sounds unlistenable, or even bad; some parts I enjoy quite a bit. What this means is that the album doesn't particularly move me in any way but simply serves as background music.

I prefer the mixture of lyrics and beats to simple beats.

These songs have words, but they don't follow each other, and are simply a hodgepodge of sounds. While I appreciate the apparent post-modernism of this approach, I want to feel emotion at a gut-level first rather than to also go through in-depth intellectual processes.

All the DJs are probably feeling like haters at this point, and that's okay. This album will probably work for those who like this style of DJ'ing, but probably won't be checking out for those who don't.

For my tastes, I prefer DJ Jazzy Jeff's "The Magnificent." This 2003 album featured DJ Jazzy Jeff scratchin' up the turn tables while some of the best underground rappers I've ever heard took the mic.

This is the kind of album I'd like to hear from more DJs, and with Mix Master Mike's connections it wouldn't have been hard to do.

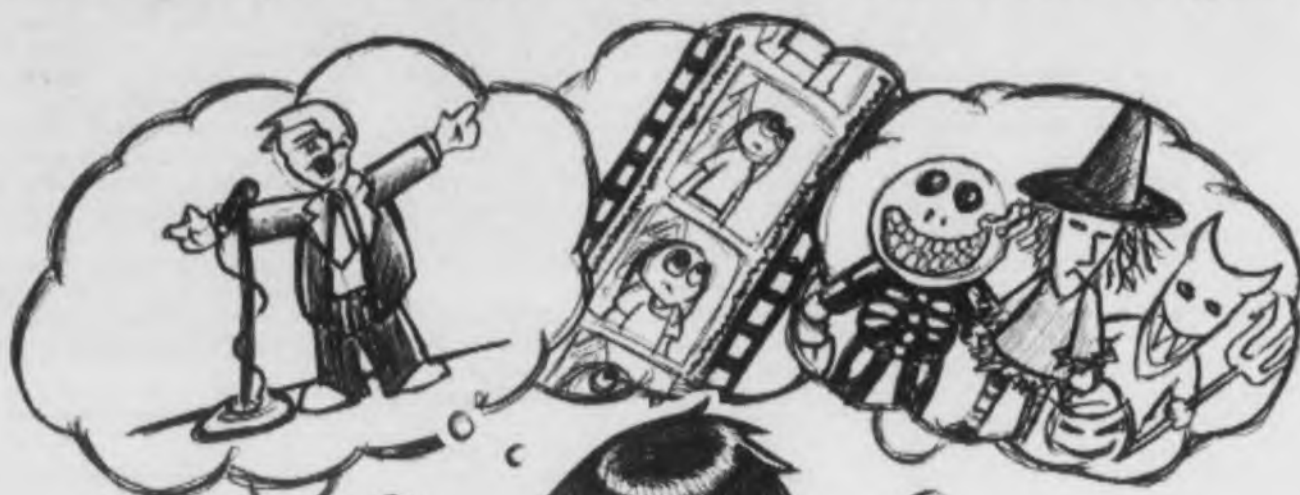

Since Mix Master Mike began working with the Beastie Boys, their work has grown more and more political. I assume some of their politicization is the work of Mix Master Mike.

On his own record I think he'd like to be able to extrapolate on his vision, but instead it's just scratches, blips and samples that could mean anything or nothing, all at the same time.

If you are into hip-hop and just want some good beats to bang in the background, this is a lot better than any of the multi-million bass-only compilations that litter bargain bins.

If you're looking for something to move and inspire you, I suggest checking out Mix Master Mike's more well-known work with the Beasties or DJ Jazzy Jeff's "The Magnificent."

UPC committes bring events to campus

By Christin E. Kuchem
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With events like "An Evening with Mo Rocca" and the Thursday Night Buzz Series, the organizers at the Union Program Council stay busy.

"The goal of the UPC is to bring inexpensive or free events to K-State students," said Beth Bailey, the UPC's Assistant Director.

The UPC is made up of seven individual committees, a president, and a vice president whose functions are performed by and for K-State students. The committees include: arts, entertainment, films, forums, multicultural, special events and traditions.

The committees each have two chair members who hold executive titles. Each committee organizes and sponsors events pertaining to committee interests.

Krista Biddle, a junior in public relations, shares the title of traditions committee chair.

"Traditions is in charge of events such as the Union Expo," Biddle said. "We also do the dinner theater each semester. Around Halloween we organize the Children's Carnival in which we give out candy and have some special games for the kids."

Biddle said each executive member is picked through an application procedure.

"I simply filled out an application," Biddle said. "It asks what kinds of things you can do for the school. Then there is an interview in which the current executive board asks you questions. It's a simple process."

Lynn Bickley, graduate student in college student personnel and assistant to UPC, said she has a long history with UPC.

"During my undergraduate years, I was on UPC all four years. Now my job is to advise both the multicultural and traditions committees."

Bickley stresses the importance of

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

UPC holding a student-organized function.

"The events are based solely on student-involvement," Bickley said. "We, as advisors, leave everything up to the students. We are here as a resource for them. Because we use student fees for our programs and events, the UPC is a chance for students to see where their money is spent."

Students who wish to join UPC to help out within each committee are greatly welcomed. The meetings take place 5:30 p.m. every other Tuesday in Union Station.

"We love having committee members come to the meetings," Bickley said. "Anyone can just show up and help out. Within each meeting there's generally a lot of brainstorming about possible events."

Biddle said helping out generally means a collective thought process.

"It's really an idea gathering process," Biddle said. "Committee members come out and help with the actual planning process."

"Besides, you get to choose which committee you want to be involved with. It's really up to you. You get to choose."

Biddle said members of the UPC find their involvement has created a positive impact on their social lives and career goals.

"I like meeting fun people I normally would not have met," Biddle said. "I want to spend my time doing something on campus that really makes a difference."

"Also, I'm a public relations major so it ties in with what I want to do, which is event planning."

Bickley said you can get as much out of working for the UPC as you put into it.

"For the amount of time put into this you can get a lot out of it," Bickley said. "You can choose as much or as little time you can afford. It's a lot of fun, which explains why I've been involved in it for so long."

But for students mainly interested in upcoming UPC-sponsored events, the council offers a wide-range of activities for the remainder of the semester.

"We always have so many events going on here," Bailey said. "We always have art exhibits in the Kemper gallery. We have feature films every weekend. We will be celebrating Native American culture this month for our Festival of Nations celebration. There is just a lot going on and something for everyone."

Interpol displays improved musicianship

Album review by Mark Sibilla

The beginning of the 21st century introduced the music world to many new, talented bands that were heralded as the 'saviors of Rock and Roll' (see: The Hives, The Strokes, Hot Hot Heat, etc.).

Interpol joined these ranks with their 2002 debut, "Turn on the Bright Lights." It saw a band looking for inspiration from the early 80s post-punk movement.

Bass driven songs with tightly strummed rhythm guitar and dreary, cryptic lyrics was the sound; it got Interpol many comparisons to the late Ian Curtis's band Joy Division.

Now it is time for these bands to create their sophomore albums and prove to the world that their brilliant debuts were not just a fluke.

The Strokes proved it with last year's "Room on Fire." The Hives gave us this year's "Tyrannosaurus Hives," and Interpol joins the club of bands that have effectively avoided the dreaded sophomore slump.

Interpol has obviously approached this new album with an excellent perspective: they realize that it would be impossible (and very counter-productive) if they were to make "Turn on the Bright Lights 2." So they bring improved musical chops, an improved sense of melody and a slightly less cryptic worldview to create the accomplished follow-up album, "Antics."

While "Antics" doesn't have the cohesion of sound and mood that their debut boasted, it does show a band moving in the right direction.

The album opener, "Next Exit" begins with a sustained organ chord and immediately lets the listener know that this is not the same band we remember from two years ago.

Lead singer Paul Banks comes in with vocals that immediately sound more emotionally resigned rather than bringing images of complete bleakness.

"We ain't going to the town / We're going to the city / Gonna track this sh around," are the first words we hear from Banks, but where he would have once sung with a restrained monotony that would have been buried in the instrumentation, his voice now soars over the track.

The songs on the album don't always cohere in sound and spirit as they did on the debut, but this works to the band's benefit.

The album is more a compilation of 10 strong songs that showcase Interpol's musicianship and ability to explore many sounds.

The first single, "Slow Hands," is in a word, exceptional.

The song opens with a two-chord guitar riff and is soon supplemented by a bass and drum phrase that sounds like nothing else but early 80s post-punk dance rhythm — it is a surprising, yet welcome surprise to think of Interpol rocking the hipster's dance floor.

For anyone who enjoyed the Interpol's first album, this album is the perfect next step for exploring this ambitious band.

Interpol can breathe easy now; their second album is complete, and it is a success. Their new liberated sound is a perfect direction to take, and shows a band that is, hopefully, going to be sticking around a while.

Football season rests on Meier's passing game

After last Saturday's game, I now know what the football team would look like if Steve Spurrier were the K-State head coach.

Five wide receiver sets, no-huddle, an attempted half-back pass that was bobbled by Darren Sproles and running every play out of the shotgun.

The fun and gun. Wait, that was Bill Snyder on the sidelines calling those plays.

If he would have taken Bob Stoops's visor before the game, I would have been very confused.

It was a new look for K-State, one that nearly brought them back against Texas

A&M at College Station, and the same offense that nearly pulled the same trick a week later when the Wildcats were trailing Kansas, came back, but ultimately lost.

They threw the ball out of desperation, and Saturday was not any different.

The Wildcats season is in a state of desperation.

With only two wins this season and none in Big 12 Conference play, K-State went away from Sproles and handed the offense over to sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier and a fast and dangerous group of wide receivers that all have big play abilities.

Sproles is not the same player that he was last year, that is obvious, and Snyder swallowed his pride and figured out that when defenses pack the line, running the ball behind the guards will not work.

In a matter of two months, Sproles has gone from one of the top choices to win the Heisman Trophy, to what we saw on Saturday against Oklahoma — a decoy.

He only carried the ball 13 times for 34 yards against the Sooners. A 2.6-yard per carry average against the team he torched last year in the Big 12 Championship game for 235 yards rushing.

In his last three games, Sproles has been held under 100 yards rushing for the first time since last year when Oklahoma State, Colorado and Kansas held him under the century mark.

In the Wildcats' two wins this year, Sproles has averaged 256.5 rushing, but those games were against Louisiana-Lafayette and Division I-AA Western Kentucky.

Meier on the other hand has played like a seasoned-veteran the last three games, passing for over 200 yards in each loss.

On the opening possession last Saturday, he took control of the Wildcat offense going right down the field on the No. 2 Sooners, leading K-State on an 11-play, 59-yard touchdown drive.

This is the new K-State offense, and a glimpse into the future one might say.

This is also the offensive effort the Wildcats will need to produce in their final five games of the season, if they expect to reach a bowl game or possibly win the wide-open Big 12 North division and earn a possible rematch with the Sooners in the Big 12 Championship game.

NFL | Moss' consecutive-game streak in jeopardy

A strained right hamstring might cause Randy Moss to miss an NFL game for the first time, but the Minnesota Vikings won't make a decision on the receiver's availability until Friday at the earliest.

Coach Mike Tice described the injury as more than mild, but Moss has always been a fast healer and could be able to play a limited role in this week's game against the Tennessee Titans.

Moss, who has started 101 consecutive games, leads the league with eight touchdown receptions. The All-Pro receiver was hurt in the second quarter of Sunday night's game in New Orleans — when he tripped and fell after getting tangled up with Saints safety Jay Bellamy on a pass that was intercepted in the end zone.

Moss played on the Vikings' next possession, but he wasn't thrown to and headed to the locker room after that drive.

CFB | Oklahoma lower than expected in BCS standings

Southern California took the top spot Monday in the season's first Bowl Championship Series standings, and surprisingly Miami is ahead of Oklahoma in a close race for the second spot.

Oklahoma is No. 2 behind USC in both The Associated Press Top 25 and coaches poll. Put in place after last season's split national championship, the new BCS formula relies more on the human polls than ever before.

"I think it's obviously very early. It's important that there not be an overreaction to this poll," BCS coordinator and Big 12 commissioner Kevin Weiberg said.

Still, even Weiberg was taken aback by Miami's position ahead of Oklahoma.

"I think I was a little surprised to tell you the truth," he said.

The AP and coaches polls each count for one-third of a team's total score in the BCS standings. The other third is made up of a compilation of six computer rankings.

Miles from home

Drew Rose | COLLEGIAN

Freshman libero Angie Lastra goes down to make a dig during the fourth game of last week's match against the University of Nebraska. Lastra currently holds the Big 12 record of ace serves.

K-State freshman adjusting to life in Manhattan after move from Puerto Rico

BEYOND THE SPORT

This is the second installment in a five-part series profiling the challenges involved in being a successful student-athlete at K-State.

Next week: Part Three: A Day in the Life — A look at a typical day for star women's basketball player Kendra Wecker.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Angie Lastra is your typical college freshman at K-State.

She goes to class, studies when she needs to and hangs out with her friends in her free time. She is constantly meeting new people and making new friends. She lives in a residence hall, like most other freshmen on campus.

There is a slight difference, though.

Lastra is the starting libero for K-State's volleyball team, and she is 2,325 miles from her home in Carolina, Puerto Rico.

Being so far from home and going through college at the same time could be too tough for some. Add in the fact she is playing a Division-I sport, and Lastra's workload almost seems unfair.

However, she said the transition to the States has been easier than one would think.

"It is difficult, but not as difficult as I thought it would be," Lastra said. "I have been handling everything well — as simple as I can. Everything is going perfectly."

Lastra is actually not a native of Puerto Rico. She was born in Baltimore, Md., before moving to the island at the age of seven. She speaks fluent Spanish and English, which is the result of attending a bilingual school in Puerto Rico.

Lastra said the education she received has lessened the shock of being so far from home.

"I was in a bilingual school where teachers spoke English and everything, so that's not too difficult for me over here," she said. "I'm adapting very well because of it."

It was in Puerto Rico where, at age eight, she fell in love with the game of volleyball. Standing 5-foot-6, Lastra does not look like a prototypical volleyball player. She quickly became adjusted to the libero position — a complicated defensive-specialist position generally suited for players of Lastra's size.

Lastra began to excel at volleyball, and in 2002 and 2004, she was named to the Puerto Rico Junior National Team. She was named "Best Defender" on the 2002 team and in 2004, she helped her team to a bronze medal at the NORCECA Championships.

Lastra said the game of volleyball is very competitive in Puerto Rico, and that prepared her for the collegiate game.

"We play good volleyball in Puerto Rico, also," she said. "The coaching is better here, and it's more scientific, but it's actually not any harder here than it was there."

Fritz said Lastra has adjusted to volleyball at the collegiate level better than she anticipated.

"I don't think there is any difficulty from a volleyball standpoint," Fritz said of Lastra's adjustment. "She has made the transition a lot quicker and has done it a lot faster than I thought she would."

The success of the K-State volleyball team this season has been possible in large part due to the play of Lastra. She has recorded 10 or more digs in all but one match so far this season, which is good enough to rank her fifth in the conference in digs per match. She also leads the Big 12 in services aces, with 40 on the season.

Lastra is one of four K-State volleyball players who hail from outside the United States. Joining her are senior outside hitter Vali Hejjas from Kecskemet, Hungary; junior Agata Rezende from Franca, Brazil; and freshman Rita Liliom from Budapest, Hungary. Since Hejjas and Rezende have been in the United States longer than Lastra, the freshman has had the opportunity to learn from players who, at one time, were in the same position as herself.

Lastra said Hejjas and Rezende have been role models.

"The girls, the team, they have all been perfect," Lastra said. "I see (Hejjas and Rezende) as an example. They have given me a lot of confidence and support."

Hejjas said she has seen Lastra make the transition easier than when she herself first came to the United States.

"I was in the same shoes a year ago," Hejjas said. "Her English is much better than mine was, and I think she doesn't have any problems adjusting to the U.S., and the school system, and understanding the language. She's doing pretty well."

Volleyball isn't the only thing on Lastra's mind. After all, she is attending college to get an education. Even though citizens of Puerto Rico are considered U.S. citizens, Lastra still had to meet the strict NCAA guidelines placed on foreign student-athletes.

Fritz said she believes student-athletes from out-

Raffle for Dylan tickets begins

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Local businesses in Manhattan are giving people the chance to win Bob Dylan tickets while donating to the T. Russell Reitz Animal Shelter in Manhattan.

"Win an evening with Bob Dylan" is being sponsored by CD TradePost, Texas Star Café, Auntie Mae's Parlor, On The Wildside, Manhattan Aquarium and the Animal Shelter.

Jeff Uhlarik, owner of CD TradePost, said he thought it'd be good to do something like this when he heard Bob Dylan was coming to town.

"How often do we have an event of this caliber in Manhattan? So, I thought we should do something," he said.

Tickets are being sold by the sponsors for $1, and the winner receives four tickets to Dylan's concert, transportation to and from the concert, dinner for four before the show at Texas Star Café and a $30 gift certificate to Auntie Mae's. The concert will be at 8 p.m. Oct.

26 at Bramlage Coliseum.

The drawing for the contest will be Oct. 23, and it will be announced on KACZ - FM. 96.3, Uhlarik said. All ages can enter the contest, he said, but the winner has to be 21 years old to drink alcohol.

Uhlarik said everything was donated, so all the money will go to the animal shelter.

"No one is making any money from this. All the proceeds are going to the shelter," he said. "I think they do a great service for the community. There's never quite as much money as they would like."

The goal for the contest is to raise $1,000, and Uhlarik said he thought they would meet their goal.

"We just want to support our shelter and make sure they can do everything they need to do," he said.

Jess Blue, public relations representative and volunteer coordinator with the shelter, said the shelter usually sees an insurge of animals at this time of year, so the more help they can get the better.

Blue said the shelter needs donations because it is the only way the shelter can take care of the animals. Every month $350 is spent on kitty litter alone, she said.

"We do everything we can if there's not the funds," she said. "We're able to help a lot more animals if we have more funds."

Jared Becker, one of the family owners of Texas Star Café, said the winners can either eat at the café or at the Hibachi Hut, because his family owns both.

"We're actually going to let them come in and order what they want," he said. "We're probably going to give them a free round of drinks. It's going to be a carte blanche kind of thing."

Becker said he'd rather support the community by doing services like this rather than just advertising.

"To be honest it's a win-win for us. It's almost like free advertising," he said. "We'd rather do something this with our time and our dollar."

Martin visits K-State, speaks

Candidate explains vision for Kansas education

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Science classes in Kansas public schools should examine all possible theories, said Kathy Martin, Republican candidate for the sixth district seat on the State Board of Education.

In Martin's speech Monday, "A Vision for the State School Board," she set the record straight about her position about teaching creationism in public schools.

"I'm not for teaching creationism in our science classes," she said. "I'm just saying that besides evolution, theory of intelligent design should be allowed to be discussed in the classroom."

Intelligent design theory states "natural laws and chance alone are not adequate to explain all natural phenomena," according to www.intelligent-designnetwork.org.

Martin said Darwin's theory of evolution shouldn't be the sole theory taught because it is not completely correct.

"In micro evolution there are influences in the environment," she said. "People have adapted and changed, and that can be seen. For instance, people are growing taller."

Martin said macro evolution is the problem with the theory.

"The theory that one species changed to another is pretty much disproven," she said. "Ever since people have been studying science, nothing has changed species."

Several audience members disagreed, including Joseph Kern, senior in secondary education and biology.

"She showed no or very little knowledge of what actually happens," he said. "You can't separate the two parts of the theory away from each other, because one leads to the other."

"The idea that God created the Earth is not wrong. It's just not what science deals with so it shouldn't be in the classroom."

Martin also talked about her stance on the No Child Left Behind Act.

"The fact that the federal government tells the states what to do and the states tell the local government what to do doesn't sit well with me," she said. "I think we need to keep local control, but if you want federal money you have to meet their guidelines."

Hall residents receive free guest meal passes

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students can get free meals for their guests with their meal plans starting this fall.

John Pence, associate director of Housing and Dining Services, said this was something desired by most students with meal plans and provided more value than just a discount on prices.

He said depending on the type of meal plan purchased, students got a different number of non-transferable guest passes for their family or friends.

Mark Edwards, unit director for Housing and Dining, said the free meals were a result of listening to the Association of Residence Halls.

It was an idea they thought would help all the students in the halls, he said.

Possibilities of purchasing more passes at a reduced price were being considered, he said.

"I wish I had it when I lived in the dorms. It would have made life a whole lot easier," said Jennifer Lundgren, student supervisor at Derby Dining Center.

"I pray to God he give me the energy and spark to work for others," April Chancellor, Young Democrats vice president, said.

Even with the good memories, there are still feelings of anger and loneliness that linger, especially the question of how God could take someone in the prime of her life, Fallon said.

"It's that question that brings the pain we feel," he said. "It's out of that hurt that sometimes good things come. Sometime it's the journey through the dark side of life we gain more compassion and healing."

side the United States are more prepared for college because of the process they go through to get in to college.

"Generally, with the international student-athletes, the requirements to get into universities and to meet NCAA eligibility requirements are usually a little bit more stringent than they are for U.S. student-athletes," Fritz said. "I would say, in general, the students from outside the continental United States are actually a little more prepared."

Lastra said her academic success is very important to her, and it is something she takes very seriously.

"Since I was 8 years old, I have been playing volleyball and have gone to school at the same time," she said. "I have great grades. I manage my time very well. When I have extra time, I try to dedicate it to my studies."

Even though it seems like Lastra is handling everything with ease, her teammates and coaches have noticed that it can sometimes be difficult being so far from her family and friends back home.

Hejjas said she feels Lastra is handling the distance from home as best as she can, but she knows Lastra misses being with her family.

"She probably is missing her parents," Hejjas said. "I sometimes see her talking on the phone to them. She speaks Spanish when she's talking to her parents. But she is doing pretty well. I never see her down and she's always fun to be around."

With her competitive fire and her desire to succeed on the court and in the classroom, Lastra has found a way to juggle academics, athletics, the distance from home — all the while keeping a smile on her face.

Fritz said Lastra is a remarkable student-athlete and she is proud of the way she has handled school, volleyball, a new culture and the distance from home.

"We have different customs, different food, it's just a different environment here," Fritz said. "But I think she is doing great. Her teammates, I think, have probably been the most influential in making her feel comfortable and helping take care of her."

"She is thousands of miles away from home, but I think she is happy."

Sorority house lawn vandalized with paper, signs

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Political party officials had some cleaning up to do this morning.

Kappa Kappa Gamma members woke up to see their house had been vandalized with not only toilet paper but candidates' campaign signs.

"I really have no idea who it was," Erin Leonard, Kappa president, said. "I don't know if it was another greek house or some other neighborhood people playing a trick on us. We were just as surprised as everyone else."

There were 28 small Democratic candidates signs, two large wooden signs and nine small Republican signs. The small signs are worth $5, larger ones are worth up to $150.

Kappa Kappa Gamma's homecoming partners are Delta Upsilon and Delta Chi, which Leonard said she suspects as the pranksters.

Delta Chi President Dusty Taylor said members of the fraternity were involved in some activity at the Kappa house Tuesday.

"I am pretty sure some of our guys t.p.ed the place, but I can't say who it was who put (the signs) there," he said.

Delta Upsilon President Kenneth Norton said the organization's members were not involved.

"I am completely unaware of any of our guys going over and doing that," Norton, said. "To the best of my knowledge, it isn't any of our members."

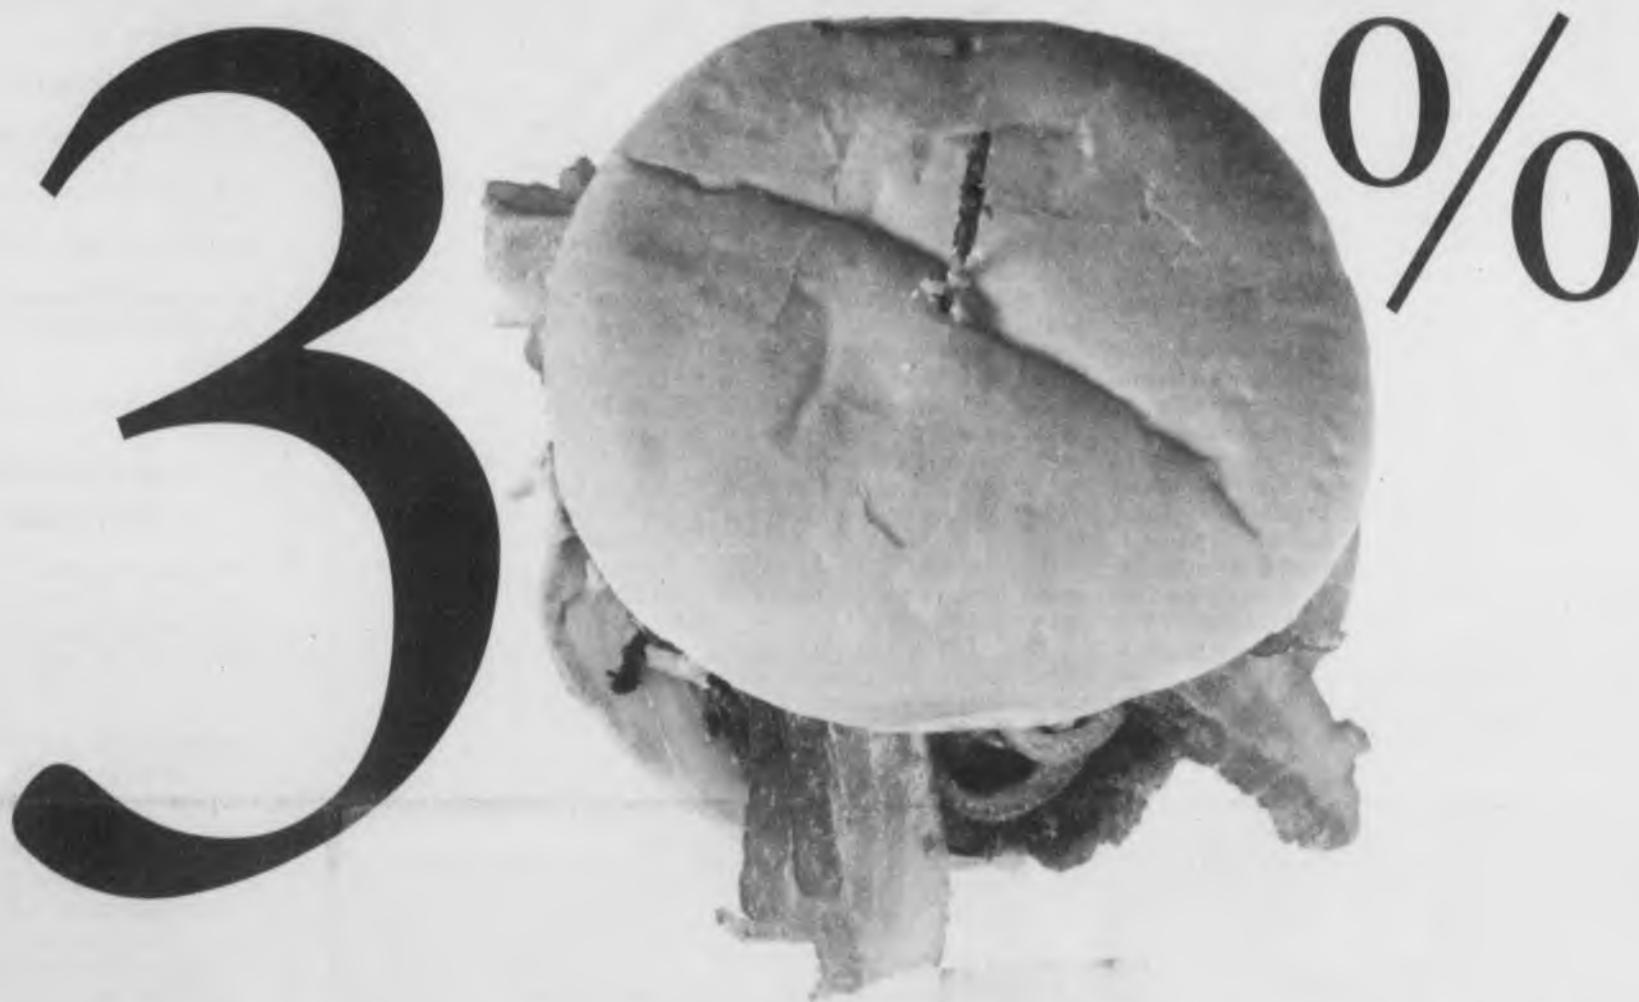

Martha Gray, co-campaign coordinator for Kansas House Democratic Candidate Tom Hawk, said she and her son collected the Democratic candidates' signs from the yard and took them back to headquarters.

A large variety of political signs decorated the ground in and around the yard of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. No charges have been filed, and most of the signs were collected by political leaders.

Voters to decide fate of ordinance requiring 30 percent of bar revenues come from food; local business owners speak out

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Voters in the November election may play a role in deciding what's on the menu in Aggieville.

An ordinance requiring a minimum of 30 percent of gross sales at bars come from food will be on the Nov. 2 ballot. If the initiative passes, the ordinance will be repealed. Such a referendum failed in 1996.

County Commissioner Bob Newsome said several local business owners approached the County Commission a few months ago with the proposal.

"We received it as neutral," Newsome said. "We didn't favor it or disfavor it."

He said he had been told that several counties had already repealed similar ordinances.

"We came to the conclusion that since no commissioners had a strong opinion against it, we could always find out how the people felt, and we were willing to put it on the ballot."

Newsome said no one on either side of the issue has contacted him regarding the matter.

Rusty Wilson, owner of Kite's Bar & Grill, said he has disagreed with the ordinance since the beginning.

"I have been in disagreement with it from when it was first put into law because I feel that they're requiring people to sell 30 percent food, but not requiring customers to purchase 30 percent food," Wilson said.

Wilson said the legislation forces people who want to operate bars into operating restaurants, which he said can lead to some inadequacies.

"These are things that are really not what they want to do, but the government is making them do it," he said.

Proponents of the ordinance such as J. Lester Hooper, Manhattan resident and president of the Little Apple Task Force, say the ordinance helps decrease excessive consumption of alcohol.

"With less drinking, you're going to have less problems," Hooper said. "We just feel like anything that is going to increase the amount of consumption of alcohol is not good, period."

Wilson said he didn't believe the ordinance had an effect on the amount of alcohol consumed.

"That is totally wrong," he said. "People are going to go to a bar to go out and have some drinks, and when they're done drinking they go some place to eat. That's why when they're done you see lines at places like Pita Pit, Burger King and Bob's Diner."

Wilson said the patrons who are in his establishment after 10 p.m. just don't want to be eating a meal.

"I've tried it for 20 years, and it's almost impossible to sell food from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m.," he said. "If they're hungry, they're going to find their food."

Hooper said places such as the Massachusetts Avenue business district in Lawrence have placed restrictions on new businesses requiring them to sell at least 50 percent food, though Wilson said it is not a city ordinance. Rather, it is a rule put in place by the business district to discourage bars from locating there.

Wilson said even if the referendum does pass, he doesn't think many bars will change their menus.

Mary Beth Reese, a retired substance abuse counselor for Manhattan High School and founding member of the Task Force, said while she is not taking an active part in opposing the referendum, eating food does help decrease one's level of intoxication.

Academic majors fair scheduled for today

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The grand ballroom of the K-State Union will be the location of the sixth annual Academic Majors Fair at 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Oct. 20.

Michelle Haupt, coordinator of academic and career information center, said representatives from various departments, colleges and student organizations will be available to speak with students about majors, minors and secondary majors.

She said career opportunities will be discussed and all student concerns will be addressed.

The main goal of the event is to provide students with accurate and easily accessible information about K-State academic programs and options for academic majors and careers, she said.

"It is a unique way for students to interact one on one with the faculty and advisors and find out for themselves what the various programs entail. It makes the K-State campus more available," Haupt said.

Mike Lynch, associate vice president for educational and personal development, said the fair was designed to provide opportunities for students declaring or changing their major or even choosing a secondary major.

He also said representatives from the academic departments would be available in one area and visiting with them would allow students to get information regarding their interests.

Lynch said that in his opinion, those who attend are usually freshmen or sophomores, but some juniors come to look for a secondary major.

In order to maximize benefits for students and give them enough time to meet representatives, the participants usually are students already enrolled, but some visitors from outside also come to the fair, he said.

Angelia Perry, academic adviser for the College of Arts and Sciences said the fair helps students navigate through all possible options and make an informed choice about the program that provides them with their best fit.

Speaking to people from various departments is valuable and provides first hand information for the students, Perry said.

Psych professors use students as guinea pigs

EVANSTON, Ill. — Psychology professors searching for test subjects are turning to cash-strapped Northwestern University students.

Although professors prefer not to pay subjects in all experiments, they are willing to pay dedicated students who will make a time commitment to their projects.

"I don't pay unless the study is really time-intensive," said psychology professor Eli Finkel, who specializes in social psychology. "Whenever possible I try to use the test pool, which is composed of Introduction to Psychology students. But for some studies, I need to look elsewhere."

Finkel decided to offer a cash incentive for his freshman dating study last year.

The study required students to answer an online questionnaire about their relationships every other week and attend two one-hour meetings to discuss the study. Students were paid $100 for their participation.

"When an experiment takes more time than an hour, is labor intensive, and requires a specific type of student, I generally pay," Finkel said. "That way I get students I need and who are dedicated and committed."

The financial benefit attracted Christina Mergen, an education sophomore, to the experiment.

"What really caught my eye at first about the experiment was the money," Mergen said. "But once I got involved, I really learned a lot about myself and self-reflection. It made me think a lot about my relationship, and I'm happy I did it."

Psychology professor Paul Reber, who specializes in neurology, regularly pays students he recruits for his studies.

"The NIMH sets guidelines on when it is and is not ethical to pay," Reber said. "For instance, if a test can cause harm or is seen as dangerous or difficult, it is unethical to pay. That is because I would be exploiting someone who needs money in a dangerous situation."

COLLEGE DEMS CAMP OUT TO VOTE EARLY

AUSTIN, Texas — Early voting began Monday morning in Travis County, Texas, and the University of Texas-Austin Democrats wanted to be the first in line to cast their ballots.

the University

Democrats sponsored an all-night slumber party in front of the Undergraduate Library called Voterama. The UGL is one of many early voting locations.

"We want to raise awareness about early voting," said Emily Cadik, spokeswoman for University Democrats. "People sleep out all night waiting for concert tickets. We want to show them that we can get just as excited about voting."

"After voting at 7 a.m., we are going to go sleep or maybe to class," Cadik said.

The University Democrats spent their evening playing games, discussing politics and visiting with local candidates and representatives who dropped by.

"I came to make sure that young people can voice their concerns to the ballot box," said Steven Ybarra, a representative from the Democratic National Committee.

ROOM DECORATIONS BECOME MORE UNIQUE

FULLERTON, Calif. — Six students plus one dorm can equal a lot of style. California State University-Fullerton students are giving decorators on "Trading Spaces" a run for their money.

Christopher Meyer, a radio-TV-film major, said decorating his dorm room was important to make it feel like home.

"Making my room comfortable was important so that I don't get home sick," he said.

Meyer lives in the dorms on campus and shares a three-bedroom apartment-style dorm with five other guys.

Trent Tchang, a public relations major, explained the style of their living quarters.

"The theme of our dorm is Christmas," Tchang said.

With a fake Christmas tree in the living room and Christmas lights scattered throughout the entire dorm, the guys went to all extremes to bring holiday cheer to their dorm year-round.

Ashley Allen, a business major, said their dorm welcomes and attracts people, and that is exactly what they intended with their decorations.

"People come from near and far to see our room," Allen said.

Allen said the Christmas tree in the living room has a dual purpose.

"Aside from adding to the Christmas theme, the tree is also used as a message board," he said. "We post fliers of upcoming events on the tree branches."

Using their creative imaginations, the men of the dorm room left no walls bare, with holiday wrapping paper and foil covering the walls in the living and dining rooms.

FLU SHOT CLINIC CANCELLED

STORRS, Conn. — Due to the worldwide shortage of vaccines, flu shots will not be available this year through the University of Connecticut, said Director of Student Health Services Michael Kurland in an email sent to students on Friday. Kurland said clinics originally scheduled to be held on campus are cancelled. While UConn is trying to obtain a small number of doses, it is not guaranteed. If they are successfully obtained, they will be reserved only for those at high risk, Kurland said.

High-risk candidates are defined by the Centers for Disease Control as those over the age of 65, children six to 23 months, women pregnant during flu season, residents of nursing homes and other long-term care facilities, children aged six months to 18 years on chronic aspirin therapy, health care workers who work directly with patients and care givers and household contacts of children under six months.

Lafene Health Center's Flu Vaccine

Flu Vaccine supply is severely limited. Lafene Health Center may NOT have the flu vaccine this fall.

K-State's who should seek immunization elsewhere:

- Persons 2-64 years old with underlying chronic medical conditions
- All women who will be pregnant during flu season
- Adults 65 years and older and all children 6-23 months
- Health care workers providing direct patient care
- Out of home care givers and household contacts of children aged 6 months and older

Other immunization recommendations from the CDC:

- Healthy persons who are 5-49 and not pregnant can receive the intranasal flu vaccine (will be available in the near future at Lafene)
- Persons in priority groups should seek vaccine elsewhere if their local provider does not have it available.

Prevent the Flu:

- Wash your hands with soap and water!
- Stay home from work/school when sick!
- Cover your mouth and nose when sneezing or coughing!

Students' concerns addressed

Drawn Rose | COLLEGIAN
Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, answers a student's question about the on-campus parking situation Tuesday afternoon at a university forum in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Panelists answer wide range of questions

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Prominent campus figures answered questions Tuesday in the Union Courtyard about current K-State issues.

Joe Aistrup, political science department head, Hayley Urkevich, student body president, Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, Grace Hwang, director of international programs at Hale Library, and Patrice Holderbach, Collegian editor in chief, formed the panel.

The first issue discussed was student parking problems.

Krause and Urkevich said a number of solutions to the parking problems are being considered and that adding a parking garage is a very real possibility.

A parking garage in the K-State Student Union would be considered if a student activities center is added to the Union, Urkevich said.

"If we move forward with that, there is a real possibility there will be a parking garage, too," she said.

A student activities center would be beneficial for campus organizations, she said.

"It would really increase their visibility and their ability to reach out to students," Urkevich said.

She said SGA and the committee considering a student activities center will do what they can without raising student privilege fees.

"We make an effort to see that there isn't an increase in fees, and if there is an increase in fees, there is an increase in services," Urkevich said.

Improving the wait lists for classes was also discussed, but Urkevich said it will take a year or two before that improvement can be made.

Students were also concerned about diversity at the Collegian.

Holderbach said the Collegian has taken steps to have better diversity coverage by bringing in guest speakers and being more conscious about issues.

"We have tried to do a better job of being more aware of what's going on around campus," she said.

Hwang addressed the importance of studying abroad.

"I really think everybody needs to have a study abroad experience," she said. "It will help you in your career."

Questions with more nationwide interest were posed to Aistrup, who discussed the potential split of Colorado's electoral votes, the targeting of young voters and the amount of information voters require to make informed decisions.

"I think this year we saw candidates that were different from each other. Most years we see a rush to the middle," he said. "I think they (voters) would have gotten a pretty good idea of the issues," Aistrup said.

Commission rezones corner, increases MIP punishments

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Apartments are popping up all over town, and it's likely to continue at the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street.

City Commission voted 5-0 to rezone the northeast corner of the intersection, which will allow the construction of a new apartment complex.

The space where Campus Bridge Lofts wants to build an apartment complex is located in an area currently zoned as a residential district, which prohibited such developments.

The building will have eight stories and mainly contains three-bedroom apartments, Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning, said.

Cattell said the complex will be the beginning of redevelopment which has been discussed in Aggieville and campus areas.

"It's a high density development in an area slated to have high density redevelopment," he said.

Commissioner Mark Tausig said he was concerned with the amount of parking available for residents. There is one parking space allotted per bedroom.

He said there isn't accommodations for visitors, and since parking is already a problem in the area, the one spot per bedroom will increase that problem.

"This is going to put an increased burden on an area that already has a problem," he said.

Andrew Suber, Lofts developer, said the possible parking problem can be easily remedied.

"If we take the top two floors and limit it to two bedrooms, you create eight more parking spots," he said. "There's a lot of possibility there. There's a lot of flexibility."

Commission activity

■ Commissioners voted 5-0 to rezone the northeast corner of Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street.

■ A proposal to increase minor in possession punishments on a per-offense basis was passed unanimously. The proposal also raised the standard for misdemeanor theft.

When opened for public comment, the proposal received mixed reactions.

Ruth Schrum, Manhattan resident, said she was very opposed to the building of the complex.

There were many issues she was opposed to such as height, green space and parking, but she was also opposed to the looks of the building.

"It's not going to be pretty," Schrum said. "Surely, you want some beauty in their folks."

Other residents were in support of the complex.

Greg Hastings, Manhattan resident, said he thought the building would be a great addition to the area.

"It's definitely going to be a diamond for that area," he said. "I'm totally in support of this project."

In other business, two more proposals were passed unanimously.

The punishments for minor in possession were increased from a 30-day license suspension for every offense to 30 days for the first offense, 90 days for the second offense and one year for the third offense.

Theft is now considered a misdemeanor if up to $1,000 in value is stolen and more than $1,000 is a felony. Previously the change-over was $500.

Additionally, controlling the amount of leaves intentionally raked into the street by residents was also adjusted to where street sweepers can notify the residents of the problem instead of having to have a written notice.

TO THE POINT Citizens should vote to allow free enterprise

When voters head to the polls Nov. 2, they have the opportunity to ease unfair restrictions on local bars and pubs.

A local ordinance requiring 30 percent of a bar's gross revenue come from food sales hampers often undermines a bar's main goal — the sale of beverages to customers for consumption at the bar. Businesses in general are best served — and can best serve consumers — without unnecessary regulation.

While eating food does ease the effects of intoxication, there is no guarantee that bar patrons will temper their appetites with food during a night of drinking. Whether bars remove food from their menus if the ordinance is repealed is largely unknown, but there is no shortage of late-night restaurants that serve the bar crowds after hours.

If consumers want bars to serve food, the competitive nature of the market will keep food on the menu, and consumers will be satisfied. The money consumers wish to spend in Aggieville will go with the consumers' prerogative.

Proponents of the ordinance feel it helps curtail excessive drinking, but in actuality the amount of alcohol consumed at bars isn't significantly affected by the amount of food sold at bars and pubs.

Ultimately, the repeal of the 30 percent food sales ordinance decreases unneeded government regulation.

When this column hits page four of the K-State Collegian like so many before it, 10 days will have passed since the world lost Barbara Meyer.

The past 10 days have seen me cry more often than the previous three years. One night I wound up alone at night at a cemetery, in the rain, far from home and hallucinating.

LOGAN ADAMS

I'm not good at handling death. I've lost my mind, questioned my faith, challenged God, and have somehow found my way back to what resembles sanity, as long as you squint and tilt your head while looking at me.

Still, Barbara is my editor, and I know she wouldn't want me to spend an entire column talking about her death.

Instead, I want to pass on some wisdom I've gained from my precious time with her.

First off, you should never fear the third rail. Barbara was always looking for a sacred cow to slaughter. I feared for her safety at times, especially when she dared to question the ways of the almighty football team, twice.

Still, Barbara was courageous no matter what was said about her. I've heard rumors that friends of hers were being cornered and told cruel things about her. As many on the Collegian staff have told me, she must be laughing now since she's still causing controversy in her absence.

Also, loyalty is important. Barbara supported the Howard Dean campaign earlier this year, but she stayed with the Democratic party when Kerry took over. She loved being a Deaniac, or a Deanie Baby, or whatever you like to call them, but she was realistic.

She once told me she really liked Dean more than Kerry, and hoped someday in the future she could support and vote for him.

One of the biggest changes she inspired in me was tolerance for other ideas. I once was a conservative twerp with a strong hatred of liberals and their ideas. I never showed it when I started at the Collegian, so I could get along. I was so smug.

Barbara might not have realized it, but the kindness she showed me from the moment we met eventually made me convert. She would let anyone she disagreed with speak their mind, and would gladly fight to protect that right.

Persistence was a deep trait in Barbara. In the past month, she'd been trying to put together a forum for local candidates to come and talk to K-State students. She tried to make it a joint effort between the two major K-State political groups.

One group refused to be a part of it, I'll leave it to you to figure out which one.

Despite them, Barbara put the forum together on her own. Expect the Barbara Meyer Voter Education Forum to come to a certain Student Union Forum Hall near you very soon.

As in 7 p.m. Tuesday. Be there.

Finally, I've learned to appreciate the people you work with and depend on. Barbara showed an amazing amount of love for all her columnists and the entire staff of the Collegian. I've been choking up again and again during the past few days upon hearing so many things she had said to her family and friends about the columnists and myself.

There are two ways in which I plan to honor her memory. First, I will try to be a fraction of the friend she was to the staff of the Collegian.

Second, well, let's just say that I mailed my absentee ballot last week, and I hope no one gets a heart attack upon finding a write-in vote for Howard Dean.

Celebrity endorsements a joke

I'm not real big on celebrities. The only reason I know anything about them is because I have a subscription to Entertainment Weekly, which I read for the music, movie and book reviews.

I don't clear my calendar to watch the Oscars, and I couldn't care less about what each actress is wearing to the ceremony.

So why am I supposed to care about what presidential candidate they support?

Celebrity support in politics has been a fast-growing trend that seems to have started in the '90s with the advent of super-models and mega-stars.

But it seems to have come to a head in this year's presidential election. And as far as celebrity support goes, you'd have to admit the Democratic party has the best group of celebrities supporting them.

John Kerry's got actors Ben Affleck and Leonardo DiCaprio on his side (I know I said I'm not that into celebrities, but I know enough to know this is a pretty big deal. You'd have to be living under a rock not to know that).

Kerry also has Lenny Kravitz, John Mellencamp and Bruce Springsteen rooting for him, not to mention the Dixie Chicks, the girls all Republicans love to hate.

President Bush has a never-ending stream of country and Christian rock singers backing him up in his campaign. And we can't forget Arnold Schwarzenegger.

If this election were a kickball game, with teams made up of celebrities, Bush would get his ass handed to him. I mean, come on ... it's Bruce Springsteen! He'd totally kick Dubya's ass at kickball. And you can't count on Arnold. Have you seen his gut lately?

But a kickball tournament is really all these celebrities would be good for. Because there's nothing that gives them the qualifications to tell me who to vote for.

They're all just a bunch of schmucks who got lucky enough to be spotted by talent agents. And now, just because they have millions of dollars, they've magically inherited all the experience of a political analyst.

For God's sake, Avril Lavigne is telling me to vote! She's Canadian, eh? She's got nothing to do with the American electoral system! Does anyone else see what's wrong with this?

And what about Puffy, or P. Diddy or whatever? According to www.thesmokinggun.com, the registrar of voters shows he hasn't voted since 1992, and as of this summer, wasn't even registered to vote. The same goes for Ben Affleck.

And yet both of these gentlemen are spearheading major political movements or telling me who to vote for.

What are the chances these people pay more attention to the campaigns than you or I do?

OK, so maybe Ben Affleck does. He has to do something while waiting for the script to his next colossal cinematic flop.

But do yourself a favor on election day and think for yourself. Ben Affleck won't have anymore special insight into the election than you do. He might get free ketchup, but that's about it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Candidate not suited for board

Editor,

After attending Kathy Martin's lecture and Q&A session, I am left in awe of how much we need the theory of evolution to be taught in schools and taught to future teachers.

Martin has been the head science teacher at the elementary school in Clay Center for many years, yet her understanding of evolutionary theory is not what we should expect of someone who should be a scientist of sorts.

Basically, I would not want her to teach my children, had I any.

It's not that I am against the idea of an Earth created by God.

I am against people who do not understand evolution, yet refute it and claim intelligent design is a more plausible theory.

As quoted in Monday's paper, the intelligent design theory states, "natural laws and chance alone are not adequate to explain all natural phenomena."

This means that the points of confusion about a few points in evolutionary theory are enough to break down the entire thing, which has stood up to 140 years of scientific scrutiny (and, yes, scientists do scrutinize it, not just blindly accept it). And in these theoretical holes, intelligent design theorists insert God.

My contention here is that intelligent design is not scientific enough to be taught in a classroom because of two things. Number one is that its basis, or underlying principle, is supernatural. Science uses only observable data to support its claims.

God's presence or influence cannot be scientifically demonstrated, so this makes intelligent design unscientific. The second reason intelligent design is not scientific is that it has no predictive value. Science is a tool, not an answer.

In addition to telling us how life came about, we use it to make predictions about things like animal diversity. Intelligent design only looks at the past and cannot be used as a tool of prediction. Looking at the diversity and uniqueness of island species, an intelligent design theorist would say that God likes islands.

Evolutionary theory provides a more concrete, step-by-step explanation. So why campaign for the use of one tool (intelligent design) when it is inferior to the current tool (evolution)?

What really made me grab my head in angst was how totally off Martin was on the issue.

She did not seem to grasp what is and is not scientific or what the details of evolutionary theory are.

She had done research into intelligent design, but did not seem to have done any research whatsoever about evolution.

Basically, she was looking at it from only one side, and she made no attempt to become more knowledgeable. This is not the person I want to teach our children.

Failing to teach creationism is wrong

Editor,

Monday's To the Point editorial presented the opinion that creation and evolution should not be taught together in public schools because creationism has no scientific basis.

In truth, neither creation nor evolution are within our scope as humans to prove beyond all reasonable doubt.

They each require faith. Each theory has its own scientific merit (as well as lingering questions), but to believe either theory requires the assumption that the other is false. To teach only one curriculum assumes the other is false.

If one isn't taught, it is given no merit; most people aren't aware of the scientific reasoning behind creationism, so they assume it has none. As a creationist, I don't want creation to be the sole curriculum.

I encourage both to be taught because I believe students will see evolution as false when taught beside creation. Do you not have as much faith in evolution as I have in creation?

By the way, the purpose of the editorial was to oppose Kathy Martin's stance as she gave a speech Monday. Except you failed to mention where and when.

PERSPECTIVES

Bush fails to keep promise to raise Pell Grant award funds

ARIZONA DAILY WILDCAT
U. ARIZONA

TUCSON, Ariz. — In his 2000 campaign President Bush said he would raise Pell Grant awards to $5,100 from the existing $3,300 when he entered into office.

Now, with his term almost over, Pell Grants have only been raised to half the promised increase. They have held at $4,050 for the past three years with no indication that they will be increasing anytime soon.

The Pell Grant failure has provided fodder for Bush's opposition. In their last presidential debate together, Sen. John Kerry attacked Bush for not boosting the Pell Grant.

Despite this broken campaign promise, the criticism directed at the president over the matter of Pell Grants is vastly unwarranted.

To hold the president to his original platform regarding financial aid awards would be unreasonable given the extenuating circumstances of his term.

The current administration has had to deal with a terrorist threat that is unprecedented in our country's history.

National security has been placed at the forefront, while matters like education have taken a backseat.

In order to ensure the safety of the United States, the president has had to create a massive bureaucracy with which to better manage the terrorist threat.

Additionally, the resulting costs incurred from 9/11 have plunged this nation into a major recession, which we are just beginning to recover from.

Given these factors, the blame cannot be placed entirely on the president and his administration.

For all current and prospective students, the rising costs of education will become a major problem and hindrance in the pursuit of a college degree.

However, we cannot expect the federal government to be the sole provider of aid.

State governments need to provide for their residents to the best of their abilities.

The federal government should be seen as the last resort in funding.

States have a vested interest in creating better-educated residents who will use their education to improve the economic conditions of their state.

Next president to shape courts

THE ORACLE
U. SOUTH FLORIDA

TAMPA, Fla. — On Nov. 2 the American public will cast their votes for who will be president. Similarly it will also elect or re-elect senators and could tip the balance of which party holds the majority in Congress.

An outcome out of these elections that many do not consider, though, is the future composition of the U.S. Supreme Court, a change that could bring even more long-term repercussions to civil rights than the direct election of the president or senators.

Court judges are nominated by the president and need confirmation by the Senate. Both executive and legislative branches therefore factor heavily in the selection of who will represent the judicial branch.

Once a judge is appointed to the bench he or she is there for life or until he or she decides to retire. Historically, judges have waited to retire until a majority in the Senate and/or a president reaches a composition they favor to strategically ensure that the judge replacing them will support their point of view.

To understand just how such long-term appointments can change the structure of the Court, one can look at Chief Justice William Hubbs Rehnquist. Appointed to the court on Jan. 7, 1972 he was one of two judges to oppose Roe v. Wade, the case that established women's rights to an abortion. He voted against school desegregation in Brown v. Board of Education while favoring the death penalty and school prayer. It's safe to call him conservative.

Since he is now approaching an age — 80 — where it is likely that he will retire, the next administration could pick his successor once he steps down.

The Court often has the last word in federal law and civil rights. In cases like Roe v. Wade and Brown v. Board of Education, its decision changed American society dramatically. A balance on the court is important in order to not have a one-sided decision-making process.

Other presidents have tried to preserve the carefully established balance of the Court. But if Bush's record and the increasingly right-leaning stance of the Republican Party are considered, it is likely the Court would be reshaped to favor right-wing ideals.

Voters might want to consider this when they cast their vote for the president and senators over the next two weeks.

Explaining sports to the uninformed a pleasure

My wife of two and a half weeks is not an avid sports fan.

In fact, there are times I think she will leave me if I watch one more game, but during Game Five of the American

MATTHEW GIRARD

League Championship Series on Monday, she proved once again that she isn't out the door quite yet.

Growing up with four brothers, my wife was forced to watch sports and grew to hate anything to do with sports. Now, she is married to a sports writer.

The poor girl.

In our time together, she has sat through many ball games and tried to understand the nuances of the games by asking questions about teams, players and strategies.

If anything, she makes me feel like I know what I'm talking about, but what really makes me smile is when — even though she is trying to be serious — she calls teams by the wrong name or isn't sure what it's called when a player gets to third base (a triple).

One of my favorite sports moments with my wife happened Saturday, when she asked me, just as serious as could be, "Why do they call it a first down, when they get more than one?"

I couldn't help but laugh out loud as I explained the concept of the first down to her.

Now, I know what your thinking. She is giving the girls who do know a lot about sports a bad name. No, she is just trying to understand, and I'm glad she tries.

During the 14-inning Game Five marathon of the ALCS between the Boston Red Sox and New York Yankees, she did her best, sitting through the game with me as I watched the BoSox pull off another unbelievable win.

At one point while I was away from the television, I called her to see how the game was going. She informed me the Yankees were leading because "Jarod" got to third base and hit in a run. Of course, I knew she meant to say "Jeter."

As we watched the game go into extra innings and the two managers earned their money by switching pitchers in and out of the game to get the

MBB | Open scrimmage to be held on Saturday

K-State fans heading to the Nebraska home football game Saturday can catch a glimpse of the men's basketball team prior to the 1 p.m. kickoff.

From 12-12:30 p.m. the Wildcats will host an open scrimmage at Bramlage Coliseum.

Fans will be able to come through Bramlage Coliseum's northwest entrance at 11:45 a.m. to catch the last 15 minutes of practice before the scrimmage.

There will also be an opportunity for Wildcat faithful to register to win a basketball signed by this year's team and purchase season tickets for the 2004-05 season.

NFL | Former Wildcat dealt from Browns to Cowboys

Antonio Bryant and Quincy Morgan are switching teams in a trade of receivers and former second-round draft picks hoping for fresh starts in new places.

Bryant stayed with the Dallas Cowboys even after throwing a sweaty jersey onto coach Bill Parcells' face during a workout in June. But he was traded Tuesday to the Cleveland Browns for Morgan, who is from the Dallas area.

Bryant has 16 catches for 266 yards this season, and had just one for 22 yards in a loss to Pittsburgh last Sunday.

Morgan, who would have been a free agent at the end of the season, agreed to a contract extension through 2005 before the trade was completed. Bryant is already signed through next year.

Morgan caught three touchdown passes this season from Jeff Garcia, but was disappointed with his reduced role over the last 1 1/2 seasons.

Morgan had 38 catches for 516 yards and three TDs last season. A year earlier, the former K-State star had 56 receptions for 964 yards and seven TDs.

NFL | Rice to Seattle trade for draft pick finalized

The Seattle Seahawks finally got Jerry Rice on Tuesday.

The trade that sent the greatest receiver in NFL history from the Oakland Raiders to the Seahawks was formally announced after the league trade deadline passed in the afternoon.

Seattle gave up a seventh-round draft choice in 2005 to acquire the 42-year-old Rice. To make room on their roster, the Seahawks released rookie punter Donnie Jones.

The trade reunites Rice, a 13-time Pro Bowl selection in his 20th NFL season, with coach Mike Holmgren. Holmgren was quarterbacks coach from 1986-88 and offensive coordinator from 1989-91 when Rice was developing into a star with the San Francisco 49ers.

Rice became disenchanted this season in Oakland when the Raiders (2-4) stopped throwing him the ball. He has five catches for 67 yards and no touchdowns this season after leading the Raiders with 63 catches for 869 yards and two touchdowns last season.

NFL | Holdout McCardell traded to San Diego

Keenan McCardell wanted out of Tampa Bay, and the Buccaneers obliged Tuesday by trading the NFL's last holdout to the San Diego Chargers for two picks in next year's draft.

The deal with the Chargers, who gave up third- and sixth-round draft picks in 2005, came just over a week after McCardell flew to Tampa from his home in Houston to meet with coach Jon Gruden in an unsuccessful bid to end the stalemate.

Tampa Bay also would receive a fifth-rounder in 2006 if McCardell goes to the Pro Bowl this year or next.

Tennis team travels to regional competition

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis team is off to face opponents from more than 30 schools in the Wilson/ITA Regional Championship this week.

Coach Steve Bietau said the regional competition is important not only for the level of play, but as a chance to evaluate the players' performances.

"Regionals are the time when we try to put everything together," Bietau said.

While the Wildcats have been successful as a team this year, two athletes stand out. Freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia has taken first in her two tournaments and senior Maria Rosenberg is tied for fifth in K-State history for career singles wins.

Both are happy about their accomplishments but don't seek out attention for their play yet.

"It's nice, but I'm not thinking about it. It's a plus that this happened, but I still have a lot of season ahead and a lot of things I can accomplish," Rosenberg said.

Bietau said he agreed Rosenberg has played well so far this fall.

"I would put her as one of the eight to twelve players that has a shot of winning this tournament, but it will be determined by if she keeps playing how she has been or if she keeps getting better," Bietau said.

He said one of the benefits of having the athletes compete so well is they help to make practice strong by contributing on the team.

The tournament competition will be fierce. Bietau said part of this can be attributed to the young and strong players in the qualifying round.

Even though the matches will be tough, Kvaratskhelia said she learned from recent tournaments to be patient and fight through the matches.

"You have to make yourself play through the difficulties and pain," Kvaratskhelia said.

Rosenberg said she is heading into the tournament without set expectations other than hoping to succeed in competition.

"I never know what can happen. I just try to do well and play the best I can and hope that my work pays off. If I focus on playing my game and playing better, everything else will take care of itself," Rosenberg said.

Coming off of the Hoosier Classic, Bietau said the Wildcats have made progress and gained experience to help them work through problems.

He said this week will be tougher and he is looking forward to how his squad will handle it.

"Kvaratskhelia has done some good things and I'm interested to see how she'll do at regionals. She can handle everything that has been thrown at her so far, but this week will be more difficult," Bietau said.

Volleyball team to face Baylor tonight

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State is home again for a match at 7 tonight against Baylor in Ahearn Field House.

The No. 18 Wildcats bumped their record to 12-6 overall and 6-3 in the Big 12 Conference with a 3-0 win over Texas Tech on Saturday. The Bears beat Northwestern State on Saturday to improve to 10-9 overall. They are 3-6 in conference play.

Baylor is led by outside hitter Stella Odion, who averages 3.17 kills per game, middle blocker Desiree Guillard-Young, who has a .356 hitting percentage and averages 1.27 blocks per game, middle blocker Adeline Meira, who leads the Bears with 1.66 blocks per game and setter Emily Huston, who is averaging 11.45 assists per game. Huston is also second in the conference in service aces, averaging .60 per game, just behind conference-leader, K-State freshman libero Angie Lastra.

K-State will try to begin another home winning streak after seeing its school-record string of 21 home victories broken by consecutive losses to Texas and Nebraska last week.

One Wildcat ready to help get that streak get started is junior outside hitter Agata Rezende. After a slow start, Rezende has come on strong in Big 12 play, averaging 2.27 kills per game on .259 hitting.

The native of Franca, Brazil said it was difficult at first to adjust to the Division-I game after her two years at Western Nebraska Community College.

"I've been through some transition time, and it's been kind of hard for me because I'm from a junior college and it's a different level of volleyball," Rezende said. "I've been learning a lot of new things that I was not used to doing, so it's been kind of hard."

Rezende said she has enjoyed her chance to get out on the court and contribute to Wildcats.

"It feels good," she said. "Even though it's hard but it feels so good."

Rezende said the Baylor game will be another opportunity for K-State to continue improving, as it nears the midway mark of the Big 12 season.

"I think our primary goal is to get better everyday," Rezende said. "We have a lot of new players, a lot of freshman and me, a newcomer. So I think our objective is to get better, every point, every game, every match. Our main goal is to get much better against Baylor."

Football team readies for game against Huskers

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats welcome Big 12 North Division rival Nebraska to KSU Stadium for the second game of a three-game homestand Saturday, with hopes of a division title on the line.

Despite three-straight Big 12 Conference losses, the Wildcats (2-4, 0-3) are looking to stay alive in the hunt for the division crown and are trying to make it three in a row over the Cornhuskers (4-2, 2-1) for the first time ever.

Since K-State broke a 29-year winless streak against Nebraska in 1998, the Wildcats have won three of their last five games against the Cornhuskers, including a 38-9 win in Lincoln in 2003.

The Cornhuskers bounced back from their most-lopsided loss in school history against Texas Tech Oct. 9, to defeat Baylor 59-27 Saturday. K-State's fourth loss of the season came at the hands of the No. 2 Oklahoma Sooners, 31-21, Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Saturday's game marks the first time since 1968, neither team is ranked in either major poll coming in and is also the first time in 11 years the game will not be televised.

WILL MEIER START?

True to form, Coach Bill Snyder would not discuss any injuries or the status of sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier at Tuesday's press conference.

When asked if Meier would start, Snyder simply said, "We'll see."

Currently, Meier is listed on the team's depth chart as the starting quarterback against the Cornhuskers, but was knocked out of the Oklahoma game in the fourth quarter.

Against the Sooners, Meier was 20-of-38 passing for 242 yards with a touchdown before being

Aid director abducted in Iraq

By Tini Tran
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Insurgents abducted the local director of CARE International from her car in Baghdad on Tuesday, targeting a charity worker who has championed ordinary Iraqis for decades. In new violence, mortar attacks killed an American contractor and at least four Iraqi National Guard members and wounded 80 Iraqis, the U.S. military said.

Margaret Hassan was kidnapped while being driven to work about 7:30 a.m. in a western neighborhood of the capital, a CARE employee who spoke on condition of anonymity said. The employee said CARE did not employ armed guards.

Hours later, Al-Jazeera television aired a brief video of Hassan in captivity. She sat on a couch in a room, speaking — though there was no audio — and no gunmen were visible in the footage. Al-Jazeera said an “armed Iraqi group” claimed responsibility for the kidnapping but did not say whether any demands were made.

The abduction highlighted that no one is immune from the wave of kidnappings in the Iraqi capital. Hassan has lived in Iraq for 30 years, helping supply medicines and other humanitarian aid and speaking out about Iraqis’ suffering under sanctions during the 1990s.

Violence in Iraq has pushed many humanitarian groups to leave the country or withdraw foreign workers — particularly after deadly bombings against the United Nations and international Red Cross last year.

Kidnappings have become a prime strategy for insurgents aiming to drive out U.S. allies in Iraq and spread chaos. Two Italian aid workers were snatched from their Baghdad office last month and later released. More than 150 foreigners have been kidnapped in Iraq, and at least 30 captives have been killed.

best match-ups, my lovely wife exclaimed, “Why do they keep changing pitchers?”

I then explained to her that generally managers want left-handed pitchers against left-handed hitters and vice versa. She seemed to understand this, then the Red Sox brought in left-handed pitcher Alan Embree and due up for the Yankees was switch-hitting catcher Jorge Posada.

She then said, “I thought you just said they want left-handed pitchers against left-handed hitters.” So I explained the switch-hitter concept to her.

With the game increasingly getting longer with every extra-inning, the tension in Fenway Park became more and more evident and my wife got caught up in the action.

“I’m glad I’m not there,” she said. “The tension is so thick, I probably would puke.”

Another classic from the misses.

Usually, there is nothing cooler than a girl who can rattle off a player’s or team’s stats against an opponent or a particular pitcher, but for all the ladies who try to make us men feel smarter by trying to understand how the game works — I salute you.

sidelined.

ROTATING LINEBACKERS

With junior linebackers Matt Butler and Ted Sims unavailable for the Oklahoma game, junior Marvin Simmons made his first start at middle linebacker for the Wildcats.

Simmons led all K-State tacklers with 13 total stops in the middle, but will move back to the weak side spot with Butler taking his middle linebacker spot back in the starting rotation.

Snyder said he has been impressed with Simmons’ progress and will have to rely on him to play multiple positions.

“Right now, he’s going to be a two-position player,” Snyder said.

“We are in the position that we are going to have to prepare him for both outside and inside.”

Sophomore Brandon Archer will make his sixth start of the season at the strong-side linebacker position after registering a career-high 10 tackles and an interception return for a touchdown against the Sooners.

HARLEY DAY

The showdown with the Cornhuskers will also feature the eighth annual Harley Day.

Prior to kickoff, 100 Harley-Davidson motorcycles and their riders will circle Wagner Field. The Wildcats are 5-2 all time on Harley Day, including a 49-20 win over Colorado in 2003. Although Snyder said he has not given any thought to the annual motorcycle event, he might take a peek.

“My wife will be on one of them and she is excited about it. I’ll stick my head out and watch it,” Snyder said with a laugh.

Officials announce increased availability of influenza vaccine

By Diedra Henderson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Federal health officials said Tuesday that another 2.6 million doses of flu vaccine will be available in January to augment existing supplies as they sought to calm fears about the shortage.

"We've successfully worked through vaccine supply problems in the past and we're doing so this time as well," said Health and Human Services Secretary Tommy Thompson. "We need all of us to take a deep breath."

Officials are also looking

"throughout the world" for additional vaccine, said Food and Drug Administration Acting Administrator Lester Crawford.

"It is not possible at this point to say exactly how many additional doses we will find or what the fate of them will be in the regulatory process," Crawford said.

Earlier Tuesday, another top health official said the FDA is in "active negotiations" with a Canadian manufacturer to obtain an extra 1.5 million doses of flu vaccine. Dr. Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, said in an interview "it's possible" the vaccine from ID Biomedical would make it to American consumers this flu season.

Crawford said the FDA would inspect the Canadian facilities to see if they meet U.S. standards.

At a news conference Tuesday, Thompson said that vaccine manufacturer Aventis Pasteur told him Tuesday it was able to produce another 2.6 million doses, for a total of 58 million doses. The Bush administration has been scurrying to shore up supplies of the vaccine in the wake of the shutdown of a British manufacturing plant that in the past has provided about half of the U.S. supply.

Thompson also said the FDA had reviewed supplies of antiviral medicines and concluded that there was enough to treat 40 million people who might become sick with the flu.

"We're waging a comprehensive and aggressive response," he said. "We have good reason to be optimistic in our ability to deal with flu season and protect the most vulnerable from its harsh effects."

Vaccine supplies to the United States were severely curtailed this month when authorities discovered that vaccine from one of two primary suppliers, Chiron Corp., was contaminated. Federal authorities have asked that healthy adults refrain from getting vaccinated to leave enough for those at greatest risk: the young, chronically ill, elderly, pregnant women and certain health care workers.

Thompson aggressively defended the administration's response to the shortage in the wake of criticism from Sen. John Kerry, President Bush's Democratic challenger, who has interjected the issue into the presidential campaign.

Kerry has said the administration failed to heed warnings about a potential shortage.

"If you can't get flu vaccines to Americans, how are you going to protect them against bioterrorism? If you can't get flu vaccines to Americans, what kind of health care program are you running?" he said.

Bush said the shortages were due to a "major manufacturing defect," and sought to assure voters in Florida Tuesday that the government was doing what it could to help the most vulnerable get shots.

"Millions more will be shipped in the coming weeks," Bush said.

SIGNS | Party officials collect signs from sorority lawn

"It is discouraging for people who wish to use signs to indicate their preferences to have them stolen," she said.

"In an election where we have such diverse attitudes and issues from the candidates, it is even more discouraging for those people."

Republican Party Chairman Charlie Hostetler said he was unaware of the incident and doesn't keep track of candidates' signs.

"I don't keep track — it's up to the candidate," he said. "I don't think it's that big of a deal unless it's a lot of them."

Hawk said he keeps track of his signs in Manhattan, especially the larger ones.

"I am very frugal," he said. "I can't afford to lose signs. I keep close tabs on my signs."

Hawk said he is always an advocate for K-State and hopes the prank was done without much thought.

"I think it's probably in bad taste, but I don't think the intent was harmful," he said. "I do want K-State students to know how important I think the K-State community is."

Chris Getty, candidate for Riley County Attorney, also had a large sign stolen.

"Obviously, I found out this morning. Someone called me and indicated they were missing," Getty said.

"I haven't even figured out where they are missing from yet. I realize it was a prank, and it was probably done in humor and fun, but I hope no one will start a pattern from this."

Both Getty and Hawk said they will not press charges.

The Kansas Secretary of State's election officials, as well as the Riley County Clerk's office, said they do not investigate election signs being stolen, but leave it up to local police departments.

The K-State police department had not received a report as of Tuesday afternoon.

Scott Jones, director of Greek Affairs, said he has not received a complaint.

"We do have an obligation to respond to what someone believes to be a concern," Jones said. "We are not set up to be a detective, fact-finding body. We are a fact-finding body if someone directs us."

Gray said the parties could still have fun with the incident despite the stolen signs.

"The Democrats are definitely winning the sign war," she said.

drinking, it will help," she said.

However, Reese said she can understand the position bar owners find themselves in.

"I can see both sides of the issue," she said. "I understand the difficulty for bar owners."

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said her association, as well as the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, has endorsed removing the restriction.

"In a nutshell, we think that there is only so much you can do with your entertainment and dining dollar," Sieben said. "There are many, many dining establishments in the county and this is putting government regulation on a small business."

That regulation is the main reason, she said, the association chose to endorse the efforts of local bar owners to get the issue on the ballot.

"Basically, it's about government regulation and letting people decide where they want to spend their dining dollar on."

Despite the endorsement, Sieben said they have taken no active role in the process as an association, but nonetheless she said they are optimistic it will pass.

"I feel optimistic because I feel it's all about educating the public on what it's about," she said. "It's about making a level playing field, and I think and it's about government dictating to small business."

David Latty, manager of Pat's Blue Rib 'N Barbeque, said it's not a problem for his business, but he doesn't like the specific law.

"It's gotta go," he said. "It's an antiquated law, and I don't quite understand it."

Latty said his business focuses more on food than some places, so the 30 percent figure wasn't hard for them to achieve.

But, not all bars have that luxury.

"For so many bars down here, they get a late crowd, and it's just a hassle for them to try to keep their food sales up to make the requirement," he said. "If people are eating at the bars, they're generally not eating a meal; they're eating the snack portion of the food."

Police seeking 3 robbery suspects

By Leann Sulzen
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three men entered a home at 1014 Vattier St. Tuesday night and forced five victims to the floor.

Two of the suspects were armed with handguns and entered the residence through the unlocked back door, according to a press release by the Riley County Police Department.

Police said one victim, Richard Pitts, 18, of 1006 Leavenworth St., was repeatedly kicked in the head by suspect No. 1 after being directed to lie on the floor.

The men then proceeded to search the victims for items of value, and eventually departed with about $350 in cash, a handbag, a Rolex watch and a cell phone, the RCPD said.

Before departing, one of the suspects sprayed the victims with pepper spray.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup said none of the suspects have been arrested, and the police are continuing to investigate.

Two of the five victims were arrested on drug charges after investigation, Moldrup said. "The entirety of the events in the investigations produce evidence to support the charges," he said.

Sean M. Plummer, 23, of 1014 Vattier St., was charged with conspiracy to distribute marijuana. He was released on $1,000 bond. Adolfo Lopez Jr., 23, of 1525 Hillcrest Drive., was charged with possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, no Kansas Drug Tax Stamp and unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds. He was released on $2,500 bond.

At 4 a.m. Wednesday, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the RCPD served a search warrant at 1525 Hillcrest Dr., the same address as Lopez, who was charged after Tuesday night's robbery.

Moldrup said the two events are unrelated.

Officers seized about one pound of processed marijuana which had a street value of about $1,000, according to an RCPD press release. Cultivation equipment and drug paraphernalia were also found.

Jeremy Eugene Jones, 23, and Juan Angel Tristan-Perez, 22, were charged with possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, possession of drug paraphernalia and no Kansas Drug Tax Stamp. The men were released on $3,000 bonds.

Hearing set for soldier accused of murder

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Fort Riley soldier accused of murdering an Iraqi civilian will appear in military court today.

Staff Sgt. Cardenas Alban will appear in an Article 32 hearing at 9 a.m. today at Camp Al-Tahreer in Iraq.

Alban of Carson, Calif., joined the Army in 1997. He was stationed at Fort Riley and assigned to Company C, 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment.

Staff Sgt. Johnny Horne Jr.

of Winston-Salem, N.C., was also arrested in for the same incident. He served in the same unit at Fort Riley as Alban.

An Article 32 hearing is in place of the Fifth Amendment rights given to civilians. Article 32 ensures military personnel a thorough investigation of the facts and to determine if the charges are accurate. It also allows the accused and defense to have pre-trial discovery in which witness statements are prepared, and if witnesses testify, they may be cross-examined.

An investigating officer listens to statements and evaluates all evidence and then makes a conclusion and recommendation. This decision is not final but only advisory.

The process is similar to a

Nodding off during the day may be more than just a nuisance.

Diana Fritz, lead sleep technician for Mercy Regional Health Center Sleep Disorders Services, said sleep deprivation can produce specific effects on people.

"Excessive daytime fatigue, high blood pressure, mood changes, lack of concentration, sexual dysfunction, frequent urination at night, complaints of snoring or gasping for breath, waking up in the morning with headaches, irritability, memory loss, depression, obesity, heart disease, heart attacks, a decrease in the quality of life and car accidents can all occur from sleep deprivation," she said.

The purpose of sleeping is so that major muscles and organs can replenish themselves, Fritz said.

"When you're not getting the restful sleep you need it affects your heart long term basically, because you are wearing it out," she said.

Trevor Richardson, intern counselor at University Counseling Services, said job and school performance can be greatly affected by sleep deprivation.

"It's definitely going to affect you," he said. "When you are not rested, your body is not functioning well and your memory is not functioning as well."

Those who drive while fatigued are at an even greater risk.

Earlier this month a local Manhattan resident and K-State senior, Barbara Meyer, 20, was killed in a car

No remains found after search of farm; owners demand apology

By Sarah Rice
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An investigation of a Morton County, Kan., farm was completed Wednesday with no discovery of human remains.

The investigation began Oct. 8 after a Topeka judge found there was enough cause to believe evidence of a crime could be discovered. Attorneys have said the investigators from the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and Kansas Highway Patrol were looking for religious artifacts, clothing and human and animal material.

Morton County Sheriff Loren Youngers told the Associated Press the search stems from the slaying of a teenage girl from Elkhart, Kan., in March 1971. Two weeks after she disappeared, she was found strangled in a field 1 1/2 miles northwest of Elkhart.

The investigation also stems from an allegation a relative made during a court hearing in Texas.

The owners of the farm, Larry Joe and Betty Bitner, have demanded an apology from state officials who they say perpetuated rumors of illegal activity. Betty Bitner said her husband was asked to provide DNA samples to authorities.

Attorney General Phill Kline released a statement Wednesday saying the agencies involved in the search were briefed in advance with the understanding no public comment would be made about the case.

"Unfortunately this did not occur," Kline said in the statement. "The result was a rampant media speculation and the reporting of rumor."

The comments appeared to be directed at Gov. Kathleen Sebelius who told the Associated Press last week that "there have been rumors for Many Americans have made up their minds about the presidential elections, but some remain undecided after months of campaigning and three debates between President George W. Bush and Sen. John Kerry.

Those voters may be the ones to make the difference come Nov. 2, but who has their ears? Hollywood often is labeled as a liberal hotbed, and the following quotes from a number of celebrities don't try to hide from that belief.

USD 383 considers school closures

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 School Board discussed the possibility of closing schools during their meeting Wednesday night.

The schools discussed included Manhattan High School's East Campus building and Theodore Roosevelt Elementary.

Board members discussed the possibility of moving the ninth grade students to the middle school or moving the sixth grade students out of elementary and into the middle school.

Closing the East Campus building would result in about $387,000 in savings after considering the cost to maintain the building at the minimum level, Bruce Stiles, director of budget, said.

Moving the students in the sixth grade to the middle school would result in more class space at the elementary level and students from Theodore Roosevelt Elementary would be moved to other schools and the school would close.

School Board Member Dorothy Sol-dan, said she wanted to consider the affects of moving the ninth grade into the middle school.

"I'm not seeing the value of putting ninth grade there," she said. "It may cut back the choices in curriculum for ninth grade students."

School Board Member Jim Shroyer said he wants to see other options including having the entire seventh grade and half of the eighth grade at one middle school and the other half of the eighth grade and the entire ninth grade at the other middle school.

"I don't think right now is the time to be close minded," he said. "If we want the community to buy into our decision we better make sure that there is more than just one that we are looking at."

The school board also discussed the possibility of a tax levy to help with the current budget problems.

If the board decides to pursue a tax levy and the public votes for it, it would only be in place for about three years, Board President Walt Pesaresi said.

"If this is just a three year time thing, what do you do at the end?" he said. "We need to have a complete gameplan."

School Board Member Roger Brannan said the board needs to make a choice.

"It goes back to a rhyme I heard as a kid," he said. "When in trouble or in doubt, run in circles, scream and shout. We need to move in a direction."

In other business, the Board discussed their superintendent search.

Kansas Association of School Boards Representative Max Heim presented the possibility for sessions so those in USD 383 could have an input on what they are looking for in a superintendent.

The Board decided to have meetings with different groups such as the business community, teachers, parents, government officials and community members.

While no date has been set, all of the meetings will take place on the same day.

Iraqis call for greater U.N. presence in upcoming elections

By Rawya Rageh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq's interim government complained Wednesday that the United Nations isn't doing enough to help prepare for January elections, saying the organization has sent fewer electoral workers than it did when tiny East Timor voted to secede from Indonesia.

U.S. aircraft, meanwhile, mounted four strikes in Fallujah on what the U.S. military said were safehouses used by Abu Musab al-Zarqawi's terror network.

A Sunni Muslim clerical group demanded that the Iraqi government prevent any full-scale U.S. attack on Fallujah, hoping to muster the same public anger that forced the Marines to abandon a siege of the city last spring.

In other violence, 11 American soldiers and an Iraqi interpreter were wounded when two car bombs exploded in Samarra, a city that U.S. and Iraqi forces have hailed as a success story since taking it from insurgents last month. An Iraqi child was killed and a civilian was wounded, the Army said.

A suicide bomber in Baghdad detonated his car near a U.S. patrol on the airport road, wounding two American soldiers and two Iraqi policemen. The road is among the most dangerous in the capital. Zarqawi's terror organization claimed responsibility for the attack, though it was not immediately possible to verify that the Internet posting was authentic.

TO THE POINT Iraqi elections require increase of U.N. troops

The United Nations needs to send more troops to ensure Iraqi elections can be executed fairly and safely in January.

Iraq's Foreign Minister Hoshiyar Zebari complained Wednesday that the U.N. workers sent to Iraq have been fewer than the 300 who helped with the 1999 elections in East Timor.

The international body pulled its staff from Iraq after its headquarters were bombed, killing 22 people. Instead, Secretary-General Kofi Annan has allowed the training of Iraqis outside the country who return to Iraq to instruct others on how to run the elections.

The United Nations has an opportunity to ensure chaos in Iraq doesn't turn into civil war as some officials have predicted. Whether it be training more Iraqis to serve as election officials or sending U.N. forces to secure polls, something needs to be done.

If the polls cannot be secured, then the elections should be delayed until the country is more stable.

The Iraqis deserve a fair chance at democracy where all have the opportunity to vote. It's time for the international community to act. The United Nations can only benefit from securing Iraq's elections by creating a more democratic, stable world environment.

Only informed citizens should get out and rock the vote

OK, we need to sit down and have an important talk. No, not the birds and the bees talk. That talk is disturbing and emotionally scarring. I wouldn't touch that talk with a 10-foot-talk-touching pole.

No, I mean the other talk. The voter responsibility talk. Come back here; this is important. So...ahem...

Democracy is rule by the people. Now, I know what you're thinking in your brash youth, "Hey, I'm a people! How do I get in on this ruling action? And how do you know what I'm thinking, that's just freaky!"

Well, you see, every American is born with this little doohickey called the right to vote.

It works like an advanced form of peer pressure: If everyone votes to jump off a cliff, then, by definition, that must be the right thing to do. Always listen to democracy. You wanna be cool, don't you? Don't you?

Democracy does have a flaw, though. As I said, every American is born with this little doo-dad called the right to vote. Soon after puberty, it's ready for use. But that doesn't mean you're ready to use it. It takes a sense of responsibility and maturity to use it properly.

"Rock the Vote" — or RtV, an MTV spawned abomination — sundry other "Get out the Vote" efforts will try to get you to use your vote before your ready, with lines like, "hey baby, it's your civic duty to vote."

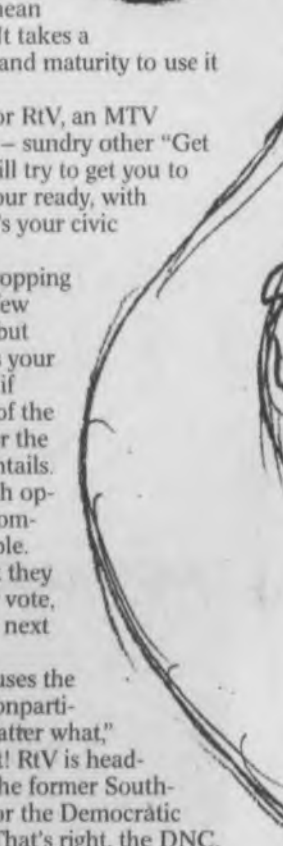

I must confess to dropping the "civic duty" line a few times back in the day, but don't you fall for it. It's your civic duty to vote only if you have a firm grasp of the issues and are ready for the responsibility voting entails.

They may be smooth operators, but RtV and company are not nice people. For all their sweet talk they just want you for your vote, and then it's on to the next young thing.

RtV also routinely uses the line, "Hey baby, I'm nonpartisan, I'll love you no matter what," but don't you believe it! RtV is headed by Jehmu Greene, the former Southern political director for the Democratic National Committee. That's right, the DNC.

GRANT REICHERT

Illustrations by Sara Kissick | COLLEGIAN

They've found their demographic, and they're not above trolling the neighborhood for kiddies.

RtV will lie to you to get you into the voting booth, simple as that. According to the Los Angeles Times, they e-mailed 640,000 fake draft notices to scare the youth into voting for them, despite the Bush administration repeatedly debunking this malicious draft fear mongering.

RtV even has an ad that parrots these unfounded rumors, and their blog might as well be called "Draft the Vote."

One of their ads basically says that if you don't vote, the right to vote of women and minorities will be rescinded.

Another implies that freedom of speech itself will be taken away if you don't "rock the vote," as it were. That's how outrageously low they will sink.

RtV doesn't respect you for who you are. They think you'll give up your vote just like that, if they simply distill Democrat issues down to crude sound bites, jam them into the mouths of celebrities, and frame it as the new civil rights struggle.

To borrow a line from P-Diddy, people died to get the right to vote. Now, if you know nothing about the candidates involved, besides what you've heard from Paris Hilton, do you really want to make a mockery of that right by engaging in it despite your ignorance?

Don't listen to the seductive sweet talk of these hipsters. Er, hipsters? Do your kids still use that one? Well, since I know, I'm not the "grooviest" "dude." I'll just pass on some advice from Matt Stone, of South Park fame, given in a Rolling Stone article.

"If you don't know what you're talking about, there's no shame in not voting."

Indeed; if you're uninformed, just plan on staying home and "voting" the Anheuser-Busch ticket come Nov. 2.

Low voter turnout isn't something to be ashamed of. You need to save your vote until that special candidate comes along, one that you can get to know and wholly commit your vote too, without regrets.

And don't even think about voting third party. That causes hairy palms.

Journalism job causes grief, appreciation

The Collegian ruined my life. I won't bore you with tales of thankless 60-hour weeks, or the fact that neither my wife nor my mother reads my work.

No, the true pain stems from my experiences as a copy editor.

It's difficult to go from aspiring for perfection on each word and punctuation mark to reading the drivel in advertisements and second-rate newspapers. Any social skills I developed early in life were destroyed by my job editing copy.

Apparently, it does not help you make friends when you're at a party, having a good time, and you correct someone for improperly ending a sentence in a preposition.

Fortunately, however, I've found an underground civilization that appreciates proper language usage and Associated Press style.

Copy editors essentially are a species unto themselves.

They're a nocturnal people. The nighttime publication of morning newspapers requires that they come to work after dark and stay sometimes until near dawn.

This is the primary cause of the glazed-over look that pierces your soul into your gerund phrases. The other cause is having to deal with writers.

Reporters and writers, as copy editors learn early, are very pompous. They consider themselves wordsmiths who are incapable of errors. Never mind the fact many of them don't realize respectable newspapers should not use "hopefully" to mean "in a hopeful manner."

Such lessons are easily learned if they'd glance at a stylebook instead of practicing their Pulitzer acceptance speech to their stuffed animals.

But such are internal issues. The real work of the copy editor is under-appreciated by you, the reader. By merely having my name associated with the newspaper, I am personally faulted by friends for misspelled headlines, impotent leads and dumb column topics. Never mind the fact copy editors have devoted hundreds of years to saving credibility of writers and newspapers by correcting misspelled names, checking facts and preventing headlines that involve the removal of an animal's reproductive ability.

Sometimes, The Man wins.

So, I trudge through life, with each error in conventions ripping out my soul.

Fred Phelps is an evil man, for sure, but I am especially hurt when his signs fail to properly assign apostrophes to possessive nouns.

Marquees every fall scream out "Welcome back students" rather than the warm, inviting "Welcome back, students."

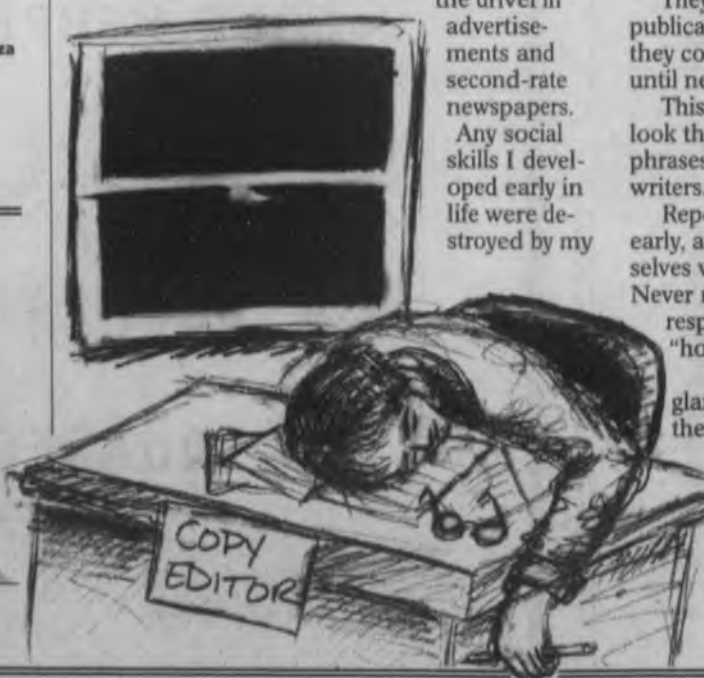

For me, each edition of the Collegian is not only a well-crafted compilation of the day's top news from the campus, city, state, nation and world; it also provides at least three minutes of rabid yelling about capitalization errors, missing facts and misspelled words.

Looking back, my life was much easier before I began editing copy.

But I now have a fuller appreciation of what it's like to have your profession ignored and unappreciated by the masses.

It's like being a high school guidance counselor, with a few more death threats.

If you have problems when you drink, you're not a problem drinker. You're just a bad drunk.

If I'm 20 but I look like I'm 12, does that mean I can still get the child discount?

I don't get it. Does supporting a needless war and persecuting minorities make Republicans feel macho and masculine?

I was just at the mall, and I saw an 80-year-old man take a sip of a milkshake and spit it into his grandson's mouth.

I know why K-State has a 15-percent increase in depression. It's probably students that are taking Human Body. What other class causes depression, anxiety and bouts of inferiority?

K-State's Agata Rezende puts down a spike against Baylor during the Wildcats' match Wednesday night.

Volleyball team tames Baylor Bears

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Angie Lastra serves the ball, she has a way of tricking opposing players.

The Baylor Bears found that out firsthand last night, as they were under the freshman libero's spell, falling victim to her six service aces as K-State swept the match 3-0 - 30-22, 30-21 and 30-26 - in Ahearn Field House.

Coach Suzie Fritz said Lastra, the Big 12 Conference leader in service aces, has serves that "float" and confuse defenders.

"The ball floats a great deal when she serves it," Fritz said. "She doesn't have any spin on it, so it has a nice float motion. And so it dies and it moves and it cuts on you, so you think you've got it and next thing you know it drops off the table."

Lastra, who also had 10 digs, said her serving strategy is simple.

"I just take a deep breath and do my best," Lastra said.

Several other Wildcats had good performances against the Bears, including senior setter Gabby Guerre, who had 30 assists and seven kills on .500 hitting. Sophomore outside hitter Sandy Werner added nine kills and senior middle blocker Lisa Martin had five blocks to lead the Cats.

Junior outside hitter Agata Rezende continued her strong play of late, tallying nine kills on .444 hitting along with four blocks.

Rezende said the defense has gotten better since losses to Texas and Nebraska earlier in the month, but there is still room for improvement.

"I think we've got a lot of work to do on our defense - especially me, because it's kind of different for me," Rezende, a junior college transfer, said.

Fritz said a big part of that defensive improvement has to do with Rezende's improved play.

"I think we've made a tremendous amount of growth in our ability to defend left-side attack, and most of that is contributed to Agata and the growth that she has made as a blocker," Fritz said. "When you're serving aggressively, teams are forced to set left-side,

MLB | Boston overcomes 3-0 series deficit to New York, advance to World Series

NEW YORK — Boston blew away decades of defeat with four sweet swings.

The Red Sox are in the World Series, and they got there with the most unbelievable comeback of all, shaming the New York Yankees, the Evil Empire to the south.

David Ortiz, Johnny Damon and Derek Lowe made sure of that.

Just three outs from getting swept out of the AL championship series three nights earlier, the Red Sox finally humbled the dreaded Yankees, winning Game 7 in a 10-3 shocker Wednesday night to become the first major league team to overcome a 3-0 postseason series deficit.

Boston didn't need any of the late-inning dramatics that marked the last three games, leading 6-0 after two innings.

Lowe, pitching on just two days' rest, silenced the Yankees' bats and their boasting fans, who just last weekend assumed New York's seventh pennant in nine years was all but a lock. He allowed one hit in six innings, then Pedro Martinez started the seventh, his first relief appearance in five years.

MLB | St. Louis wins on Edmonds' home run

Jim Edmonds has a flair for the dramatic in center field, climbing walls to steal home runs and tumbling for other catches.

He'll play to the crowd a bit, too. At the plate, he takes a more business-like approach, but the results can be just as good.

Edmonds hit 42 home runs in the regular season, none bigger than the two-run shot in the 12th inning Wednesday night that beat the Houston Astros 6-4 to even the National League championship series at three games apiece.

Edmonds had struck out in the previous two at-bats, and the Cardinals hadn't had a hit since the seventh.

The homer put the Cardinals one victory away from validating their major league-best 105-57 regular-season record and advancing to the World Series for the first time in 17 years. Albert Pujols provided the early offense with a two-run homer in the first, and had three hits.

Wildcats ready to run the courts

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fans looking for grind-it-out basketball might want to shy away from Bramlage Coliseum this upcoming season, because Coach Jim Wooldridge and the 2004-05 Wildcats will have none of it.

A new-look, inexperienced backcourt did not stop head coach and players alike from stressing up-tempo play at Wednesday's annual media day at Bramlage Coliseum.

"We're trying to play more aggressive at both ends and are looking for transition as early on as we can," Wooldridge said.

K-State returns Big 12 Newcomer of the Year Jeremiah Massey and his 14.7 points per game down low, but the team might only go as far as the Wildcats' revamped backcourt.

Gone are the departed-senior trio of Jarrett Hart, Frank Richards and Tim Ellis. Gone, too, is point guard Dez Willingham due to an unexpected transfer in August.

Freshman guard Clint Stewart and sophomore transfer Fred Peete are penciled in as starters in their place, along with sophomore swingman Cartier Martin, who battled a foot injury for much of last season.

Wooldridge was not shy about setting lofty goals for his perimeter players, which also include sophomore Lance Harris, freshman Curtis Allen and junior Schyler Thomas.

"Can it be our best backcourt? I think it's a possibility," Wooldridge said. "I really do think that these two kids, (Stewart and Peete), along with Lance, along with Cartier, Curtis and Sky (Thomas) - we can get more done in the backcourt this year. Time will tell, but we feel pretty confident in them right now."

Wildcats return five seniors in defense of title

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team began life without former Wildcat great and All-American center Nicole Ohlde at the Wildcats' annual basketball media day Wednesday.

Although the defending co-Big 12 Conference champions no longer have Ohlde, who now plays for the WNBA's Minnesota Lynx, the Wildcats return five seniors, including Kendra Wecker, a Wade Trophy and John R. Wooden Award candidate.

"As a basketball team, we take the approach that we will work hard together, and we understand that we have new possibilities, new personnel and new competition," Coach Deb Patterson, who is in her ninth season as the Wildcats' head coach, said.

Along with Wecker's presence on the floor, the Wildcats will also look for leadership from senior guards Laurie Koehn and Chelsea Domenico and senior forwards Megan Mahoney and Brie Madden.

Koehn was one of the top 3-point shooters in the Big 12 in 2003, hitting 44 percent from behind the arc, and was third on the team in scoring, averaging 13.5 points per game her junior season. Mahoney's 5.23 assists per game was good for third in the conference.

Women's Basketball

■ The Women are picked third in the Big Twelve coaches poll released Wednesday.

■ Wildcats open play this season with a Nov. 9 exhibition game against Emporia State at Bramlage Coliseum.

Wecker, a third-team Associated Press All-America selection, was fifth in the conference in scoring and rebounding, averaging 16.8 points and 8.1 rebounds per game.

K-State finished the 2003 season ranked No. 8 in the Associated Press Poll after the No. 2-seeded Wildcats suffered a 80-61 loss to No. 7-seeded Minnesota in the second round of the NCAA Women's Tournament.

"They didn't let their last defeat or last disappointment of a single basketball game, defeat them as competitors," Patterson said.

"You have to have the strength and the composure to take a hit and to get back up from that and keep fighting. I think that is the composure of this Kansas State basketball team."

With the loss of Ohlde's 17.5 points per game, Patterson said the Wildcats will use several players to fill the spot.

"At the center position right now, it is something we are working to define," Patterson said. "It may be that we change the way we play a little bit. It may just be we play that five spot by committee."

Patterson said Madden will have more of an opportunity in the middle, with freshman Shana Wheeler and junior Jessica McFarland also seeing playing time.

The Wildcats will use Wecker to help sure up the center position, a possibility she said she is looking forward to.

"I'm a little bit undersized, but hopefully I can make up for that with my strength and quickness," Wecker said.

The Cats open season play with a Nov. 9 exhibition game against Emporia State at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State doesn't begin defending its co-conference championship until Jan. 5 against Iowa State but has been committed to that goal since the summer.

"Everyone has come in and worked hard," Mahoney said. "The freshmen have come in and done great so far just getting after things."

Over the summer months, the team practiced, lifted weights and took classes together in preparation for the upcoming season.

Koehn said it may be a new season, but the team's goals remain the same.

"Everything we're about and everything we want to do is really no different than it has been the past three or four years," Koehn said. "This team is going to have to step up as a whole."

K-State men's basketball shows signs of potential breakthrough

As a K-State fan, is it too early to say I am really looking forward to the men's basketball season?

Please don't take this as a sign I have given up on the football team. I love Wildcat football, and I still believe this year's team can do some good things.

With that being said, I want to talk about Coach Jim

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Wooldridge's squad.

For the first time in a long time, I am stoked about K-State basketball. I believe this team has the chance to make some noise this year.

A lot of people don't share my optimism. Many see the loss of senior guards Frank Richards, Tim Ellis, Jarrett Hart as too much to overcome. Add in the fact Dez Willingham got a little homesick and ran back to Texas, and the backcourt situation looks pretty grim.

Never fear K-State basketball fans, I offer words of hope.

On paper, this team is possibly the most talented K-State squad in more than 10 years.

K-State returns some pretty good players, particularly down low.

Senior Jeremiah Massey, last year's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year, returns to lead an inside game that could be the strength of the team. Sophomore Tyler Hughes is said to have gained 25 pounds over the off-season, which could spell trouble for opposing teams.

On the wings, sophomores

Cartier Martin and Lance Harris return, looking to live up to the hype they received when they first came to K-State. Martin and Harris were part of a recruiting class that one publication ranked No. 1 in the nation.

Add in junior-college transfer Fred Peete, a slashing off-guard, and there is adequate talent and quickness to make up for the loss of Ellis and Hart.

Point guard is where most of the concerns lie. Richards graduated, and the future of the program, Willingham, ditched out on the team over the summer.

With no experience returning, it is crucial to find a player who can step in and take charge immediately.

K-State fans, I give you Clint Stewart, a freshman from Oklahoma, who the coaches have already entrusted with the starting point guard spot. Peete is also expected to spend some time at the point when Stewart needs a rest, and don't forget

"All we ask students is to spend $3 and get the chance to win nearly $2,000 in return," Josh Koelsch, sophomore in milling science and member of Pi Kappa Phi, said.

"This is a way that our greek organizations thought would be best to get the campus involved with something they care about — tuition."

It's an issue all students can identify with, said Layla El-Chami, sophomore in family studies and human services.

"Tuition is always a concern at the university," El-Chami said. "Any way to reduce tuition, whether that be by scholarship or a raffle ticket, is a good idea."

Several local businesses, including Applebee's, Commerce Bank, GTM Sportswear and Thomas Sign Advertising, have also supported the philanthropy by donating toward the prize.

And while students compete for free tuition, they directly contribute their $3 to charity, Koelsch said.

dents to get involved in philanthropies in very simple ways, Koelsch said.

"We know students will like this win-win donation drawing," Koelsch said.

Andrew Speese, freshman in marketing, said he supports the project.

"I think the charity raffle idea is awesome," he said. "Knowing that this will go to charity, as opposed to the greek organizations, I will probably buy as many tickets as I can."

Every year, Pi Kappa Phi contributes to Push America, a charity working with disabled children, and Gamma Phi Beta contributes to Campfire USA, a camp that works to give girls a rustic, outdoors experience.

"Our goal is to expand on our philanthropies through this competition, giving back to something that really matters," Koelsch said.

Grace Pestinger, junior in pre-pharmacy and member of Gamma Phi Beta, said so far the competition has been well received on campus.

"The response is just awesome, and with big events such as Family Day, we have really done well," she said.

Koelsch reports they have already raised $1,600 through the competition. They plan to sell more tickets at other campus events, including football tailgating.

Some students, however, are not as optimistic about the competition.

Brady Vandegrift, freshman in business management, said he does not plan to buy any.

"The competition is too big for me to have a realistic chance of winning," Vandegrift said.

Despite the odds, some students are just in it for the thrill of the gamble.

"Although my chances of winning are small for winning the prize, I cannot resist to think that I have a shot at winning that much money," Andrew Speese, freshman in marketing, said.

Partnership offers non-profit focus to leadership minor

By Melissa Cessna
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A program that has taken several years of planning is finally making its debut.

K-State now offers a non-profit focus with an existing leadership minor.

The Leadership Studies program partnered with American Humanities to provide a nationally recognized certification in non-profit leadership and management.

Nancy Bolsen, director of the non-profit focus, said the program prepares students for work in non-profit organizations.

"What I think is really special about this focus is that we have this partnership to really prepare students with the knowledge and skills that they need to become a new professional in the non-profit sector," Bolsen said.

American Humanities works nationally with colleges in 35 states to prepare students for non-profit work. It is partnered with more than 20 non-profits such as United Way, March of Dimes and the American Red Cross.

Olivia Collins, staff assistant in leadership studies, is teaching theories of non-profit leadership, the first class in the sequence this fall.

"We are really trying to focus on the foundation and business development competencies that you really need to have exposure to before you get an entry level position," Collins said.

Collins said the class examines issues like career development and exploration, general non-profit management, non-profit accounting and supervision, as well as transformational leadership theory.

In addition, non-profit professionals speak to the class about various issues facing non-profit organizations. Mindy Weixelman, director of development for student life for the K-State Foundation spoke to the class about resource development.

Tom Fryer, financial consultant for Commerce Brokerage, spoke to the class about investing resources. Nancy Knopp, director of case management at Mercy Regional Health center spoke about codes of ethics.

"It's more of an organized work group than a classroom setting," Collins said.

As part of the curriculum, class members are starting the American Humanities Student Association at K-State. Students are in the planning process of fundraising for their trip to the American Humanities Management Institute, an annual national conference.

"We try to have a variety of leadership experiences to gain the information," Collins said. "We try to accommodate as many learning styles as possible."

Emily Meissen, student intern for American Humanities and senior in print journalism, said the conference features workshops as well as representatives from various non-profit organizations looking to hire for internship or professional positions.

Next semester, students who took the class this fall will complete a 300-hour internship along with a senior seminar in leadership and a leadership in practice class.

internship will be structured like student teaching, with site visits and supervisor feedback.

"This first semester the students that are currently going to do their internship are going to be doing them in local non-profit organizations," Bolsen said.

Bolsen said in time there is the potential for students to travel outside of Manhattan for internship at larger groups.

The focus was started several years ago as a collaborative effort by the leadership program.

Susan Scott, director of the Leadership Studies program, was a contributor to the effort, along with Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement.

Meissen said she was happy with the student interest thus far.

"Any time you start a program from scratch it's going to be a building process," she said. "The non-profit sector has been growing immensely, both nationally and globally. The program will also grow as the non-profit sector continues to grow."

Students, faculty mentors connect at majors fair

Karen Pence, assistant dean of human ecology, talks to a student Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Ballroom. Students and faculty members filled the ballroom to display and talk about different features various majors offer.

Representatives answer students' questions

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students had the opportunity to find out about different departments at K-State during the sixth annual Academic Majors Fair on Wednesday.

The fair offered students the chance to find out about different majors and minors, said Michelle Haupt, coordinator of the academic and career information center.

Ashley Stewart, sophomore in secondary education, said she attended the fair to look at minors and help her friend Chris Griggs, sophomore in open-option, find a major.

Stewart said she was looking into physics, chemistry and biology minors, and she thought the fair benefitted students.

"I just think that it's really helpful for students," she said.

Griggs said he agreed.

"I can get all my questions answered and kind of find out what it's like to have a career in that major," he said.

Griggs said he still isn't sure what he is going to major in, but he has ideas.

"I'm just not sure quite what I want to do," he said.

Sally Bailey, assistant professor of theater, said the fair allows students to speak directly with faculty.

"It really creates that human connection, which I think is important," she said. "People try more new things if they have human contact."

Being able to talk to the professors directly is more personal for students than walking into an office, Bailey said.

"The professors who are here, are here to be accessible and able to talk to students," she said.

Even if a student doesn't decide on a major, going to the fair is still beneficial, Bailey said.

"It might give people an idea they haven't thought of before," she said.

Haupt said the fair had about the same number of visitors as in the past.

"We continue to see the same solid number of students," she said.

Certain programs on campus were also at the event, such as the Study Abroad Program and the Community Service Program, Haupt said.

She said these programs come to the fair for reasons professors do — so they can have personal contact with students.

"It gives them a chance to visit one-on-one. It's a convenience," Haupt said.

"It's kind of a one-stop shop for students, and they may learn about opportunity they weren't aware of."

expectations for the backcourt. Despite turnover problems — 19.75 per game — K-State guards showed glimpses of their potential, as the team went 3-1. Peete was the second-leading Wildcat scorer on the tour, averaging 12.8 points per game with Martin not far behind at 11.5 per game. In an overtime loss to British Columbia, Stewart was 6-of-10 from the field, including two 3-pointers, for 14 points.

Though Stewart is slotted as the team's point guard, he said Peete is just as capable of leading the Wildcats in transition.

Massey and returning post players sophomore Tyler Hughes and junior Marques Hayden — who will likely be battling for the five-spot on the squad — will also be looked upon to run the floor.

Stewart said all the big men should be able to keep up with the Wildcats' up-tempo style.

"I think our post players are coming along," Stewart said. "They're getting up and down the floor. Coach is really preaching to them you have to run straight to the rim."

"As long as they run, I'll get them the ball."

and if you're able to control left-side attack, then you have a good chance to hold people to a low hitting percentage."

Fritz said her team's improvement is continuing, as the Wildcats head into the second half of the conference season, which begins Saturday at Texas.

"I just think we're continuing to grow," Fritz said. "We had a tough two-match losing streak, but I don't think we were playing bad volleyball. I like the way the team has played the last two matches."

COLUMN | Canada trip builds players' confidence

about the ever-consistent Schyler Thomas.

The Wildcats recently returned from an exhibition trip to Canada.

Stewart started at point guard all four games on the tour, and finished second on the team in 3-point percentage.

Jeremiah Massey was first, which is a whole story within itself.

This means the inexperience of the guards could be the team's weakness, which would spell disaster in the ultra-competitive Big 12 Conference.

It could mean that, while talented on paper, the Wildcats might not produce results once the games are real.

That's not what I believe, though.

I believe this year, K-State basketball will finally show results of the time, energy and effort Wooldridge and these players have pumped into this program.

I believe the guards will begin to flourish, and the team — led by Massey — will break into the postseason.

Many K-State fans remember the feeling of storming the court last season after the Wildcats upset No. 10 Texas 58-48, and now are hungry for more of the same.

I say get ready Wildcat fans, because the ride is just starting.

Believe in Wooly, believe in this team and believe me, it will be fun.

MP3 Students make their digital tunes mobile

By Paul Suter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They're stylish, small, fun and full of music.

MP3 players have become a hot item, said Chris Loehr, store manager for the K-State Student Union Computer Store.

Loehr said the market for MP3 players is so competitive that it might be difficult to decide which one is the right one to buy.

Loehr said the Computer Store primarily sells Apple iPods.

"We have the 20 gigabyte, 40 gigabyte, and the 4 gigabyte mini iPods available to students at a discounted education price," Loehr said.

Loehr said the mini iPod can hold around 1,000 four-minute songs, the 20 GB can have 5,000 songs, and the 40 GB around 10,000 songs.

"The iPods are generally a hot seller here," Loehr said. "They can be hard to keep in stock at times when they sell quickly. We also sell them at an education price for students which is around 20 to 30 percent off the retail price."

Staples general manager Lee Overly said his store will stock iPods in the next few weeks. He said they sell them on their Web site.

"We are looking forward to selling iPods," Overly said. "We will be selling the 20 and 40 gigabyte ones."

In the meantime, Staples stocks an iPod alternative.

"What we currently have is called the Scan Disk Companion," Overly said. "The Companion is unique in the fact that a separate portable hard drive is required to play the MP3. The Companion acts as a regular player and functions the same as many others on the market."

While many MP3 players have been on the market for three to four years, Jeff Fleming, senior in construction science and management, has had his for awhile.

"I bought my Intel MP3 player about two years ago," Fleming said. "They don't make this brand anymore, but it's still a good investment."

Fleming purchased his player for about $180 and said he has mixed feelings about buying early.

"I like my MP3 player, but I bought it at a time when the price was too high," Fleming said.

Cholera can be easily avoided while prepping food

Hello again, loyal followers.

It's become apparent over the last few weeks that you'd rather read about topics that actually affect you, like disease, instead of the duality of mayonnaise.

So I'm taking your wants to heart and giving you what you want (I'm known to be generous from time to time).

Today, class, we're going to learn about our good friend, Cholera.

The Cholera bacterium was isolated in the late 19th century by Nobel Prize winner Dr. Robert Koch. According to the Centers for Disease Control, Cholera is an acute, diarrheal illness caused by infection of the intestines with the bacterium Vibrio cholerae.

Cholera is a non-airborne bacteria transmitted through infected water sources, typically in streams and coastal water areas where advanced treatment and drainage systems are not in place, and like Salmonella it is also transmitted through feces and uncooked shellfish.

Fortunately, Cholera isn't directly spread from person to person, but I wouldn't recommend running up and giving an infected person a loving hug.

For most persons infected with Cholera, symptoms are generally mild, but can become severe and are characterized by "watery diarrhea, vomiting and leg cramps." If that's not enough for you, the rapid loss of body fluid often leads to dehydration and shock, and death can occur within hours after infection.

Cholera has been virtually eliminated from the U.S., thanks to modern sewage and water treatment facilities. So go out and give your local civil engineer a pat on the back, everyone.

Unfortunately, other parts of the world aren't so lucky. Epidemic cholera is occurring in parts of Asia, Africa and Latin America, where resources aren't as up to date.

For this reason, persons traveling to these parts of the world can become infected and bring cholera bacteria home with them, and infected persons traveling to the United States can unwittingly carry the bacteria.

Now, immigrant haters, there's no reason to flip out. As I said earlier, you're at virtually no risk. The major threat to the body is the loss of fluids and salts, and immediate replacement of those fluids with an oral rehydration solution is the treatment used worldwide.

This solution is a prepackaged mixture of sugars and salts that is combined with water and drunk in large quantities. With quick diagnosis and treatment, fewer than 1 percent of patients will die.

What can you do to avoid getting cholera while traveling in an affected area? Well, I'll tell you what the CDC has to say:

1. Only drink water that has been boiled or treated with chlorine or iodine. For those of you who are addicted to caffeine, you can make coffee or tea with boiled water, and you can also drink bottled, carbonated beverages.

2. Eat only foods that have been thoroughly cooked and are still hot, or fresh fruit that you've peeled yourself (You don't know where the person who did has been, or what they've touched).

3. Don't eat undercooked or raw fish and shellfish. This includes ceviche. Shellfish are known to be carriers.

4. Make sure all vegetables are cooked, and avoid salads. Also avoid food from street vendors (for obvious reasons).

5. Don't bring back perishable seafood to the United States. (I'm not sure why, but apparently this has been done.)

Well, there ya go. Follow these simple rules, and you should be fine. Just remember: "Boil it, cook it, peel it, or forget it."

Will is a senior in psychology. You can e-mail him at edge@pub.ksu.edu.

Love pleads guilty to hitting dubgoer

Rocker Courtney Love pleaded guilty to disorderly conduct Wednesday for hitting a dubgoer on the head with a microphone stand during a performance.

Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Melissa Jackson granted Love a conditional discharge, meaning her case will be sealed after one year if she pays the victim $2,236 to cover medical expenses, joins a drug-treatment program and does not commit any other crimes.

If Love violates the conditions, she could face 15 days in jail.

"I just wanted it to be over," Love said after the hearing. "I played a rock show. I didn't do anything. I wasn't on drugs. Playing a rock show has nothing to do with drugs."

Miss America dropped from ABC

ABC-TV has pulled the plug on Miss America, leaving the famous beauty pageant without a network television sponsor for the first time in 50 years.

ABC, which had carried the annual telecast since 1997 with a series of one-year contracts, notified Miss America Organization officials that they will not pick up the option this year, Acting President and CEO Arthur McMaster said Wednesday.

The move comes on the heels of a Sept. 18 pageant that drew a record-low 9.8 million viewers.

Garcia Marquez's novel released early

The first novel in a decade by Nobel Prize author Gabriel Garcia Marquez went on sale across the Spanish-speaking world Wednesday, a launch pushed forward because counterfeiters were already selling copies of "Memories of My Melancholy Whores."

The long-awaited novella explores love sex and life by telling the story of a male journalist who decides to celebrate his 90th birthday by having sex with a young virgin.

At a news conference in Mexico City, editors said demand for the book has been so strong that they were already in the process of publishing a second edition of 50,000 to add to the initial Mexican release of 100,000 in paperback and 30,000 in hardcover.

crash that resulted from a truck driver who had fallen asleep at the wheel.

That case has been forwarded to Riley County attorney's office.

According to the Kansas Department of Transportation, 886 accidents resulted from sleep deprivation in 2003.

Of those, there were 31 fatalities and 624 injuries.

Fritz said many drivers try to wake themselves up if they begin to feel tired.

"A lot of people will roll the window down or turn the radio up, but what they need to do is pull over and get that 15 minute power nap," she said.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup from the Riley County Police Department said he agreed.

"As soon as they start feeling tired, they should switch drivers if possible," he said. "Don't fight through it. It can lead to very deadly results."

When it comes to catching up on sleep, Richardson said it is just not possible.

"In my opinion, if you stay up late one night and sleep 12 to 14 hours the next day, you get off of your sleep rhythm," he said. "When you get off of that cycle, your body isn't as alert as it is supposed to be."

Fritz said she agrees.

"It's not possible to catch up on sleep," she said. "What happens is you deprive your body of stages of sleep and you go into REM rebound."

Richardson said the best thing to do is get on a normal sleep cycle.

A normal sleep cycle can be determined by waking up naturally, not by an alarm, Fritz said.

"Don't get up until you feel like you are awake," she said. "If possible, try to allow that every night."

When waking up naturally isn't always practical, Fritz said taking short naps is another option.

"Keep it to about 15 minutes, because if you get too long of a nap, you will get too far into sleep," she said. "When you wake yourself up in a deeper stage of sleep, it will throw off your sleep cycle."

Fritz said getting enough sleep every night is essential to living a healthy life.

"In today's society, everybody is so much more busy," she said. "They've got class. They've got work, or they've got kids. You have to take here and there, but you need to make sleep a priority."

civilian Grand Jury hearing, however according to the military, is more protective of the accused's rights.

Alban's hearing will be open to news media in Iraq.

Six other Fort Riley soldiers have been accused of murder in the last two months.

Sgts. Aaron R. Stanley, 22, and Eric J. Colvin, 23, were charged with two counts of murder in the Sept. 15 shooting deaths of two soldiers in September in Clay County. All four soldiers were assigned to the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry.

On Sept. 22, the military announced that Sgt. Michael P. Williams of Memphis, Tenn., and Spc. Brent W. May of Salem, Ohio, were charged with premeditated murder in the death of three Iraqis.

Williams also is being charged with obstruction of justice and making a false statement. The soldiers were serving in the 1st Battalion, 41st Infantry — the same unit as Horne and Alban.

Approximately 800 soldiers from that unit are serving their second term in Iraq.

SEARCH Attorney says KBI lied about search

A spokeswoman for Sebelius said the governor did not break an agreement with Kline's office.

Kline's office said because the public comment was made, the attorney general's office was forced to acknowledge the investigation.

The Bitners' attorney, Clinton Peterson, also has accused the KBI of lying when it denied guns were drawn when executing the search. The KBI has denied it used unnecessary force.

5 greek houses receive citations

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week, five fraternities and one sorority were cited for food safety violations.

Beta Theta Pi, Farm House, Alpha Gamma Rho, Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Nu fraternities and Delta Delta Delta sorority received at least one violation.

Every licensed establishment that serves food is required to have at least one annual inspection.

Mikki Cruse, food service sanitarian for the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, said she has follow-ups for violations that cannot be corrected on-site.

Sigma Nu was the only fraternity that requires a follow-up because they did not have any dishwashing machine sanitizer.

Cruse will make her follow-up inspection 10 days from the infraction which was noted Oct. 14.

"The fraternity was out of soap, something they couldn't fix when I was still there so I will have to go back," Cruse said.

Inspections are routine, but Cruse said she is not even a third of the way through her inspection sites.

"I have a long ways to go, but there's a lot of places I am just now tackling. I have yet to see any major problems," Cruse said.

County Commission to address wind farms

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After more than a year of debate, wind farms might be a possibility in Riley County.

With the expiration of a second moratorium on wind farms in Riley County looming Oct. 31, County Commissioners will be considering some revamped regulations on the matter at their Monday meeting.

The placement of such development in the Flint Hills bothers some groups, such as the Nature Conservancy.

Wind farms, which have been the subject of a great deal of controversy in Riley County over the past year, have been criticized as being damaging to the ecosystem in which they are built.

Turbines are used to generate electricity, and proponents argue they should be used more because they are a much cleaner source for power and do not rely on oil.

Alan Pollum, director of the Kansas State Nature Conservancy, said the Flint Hills area is already 97 percent destroyed, and any placement of wind turbines in the area risks compromising what little of the Flint Hills remains.

"We question the wisdom of trying to industrialize the remaining three percent," Pollum said.

He said the conservatory was not against Tonight people can catch some improvisational acting in the Main Ballroom of the K-State Student Union.

Tonight marks the annual "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" screening at the Union, which will include a full cast of improvisational actors. The event is sponsored by the Union Program Council.

"This year I will be portraying the character of Riff Raff. I'm not only a virgin

(to the showing), but I'm also an actor," Manhattan resident Gabriel Bonebrake said.

Bonebrake said having a full cast of improvisational characters adds charisma to the showing.

"It definitely makes the show more fun, and it really livens things up," Bonebrake said.

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is a film in which a newly engaged couple's car breaks down in a remote area, and they are forced to seek assistance from a nearby castle. The residents turn out to be transvestites, led by the sinister Dr. Frank-N-Furter, who is on the verge of creating the ultimate partner. Frank-N-Furter and his entourage take the couple hostage as shenanigans ensue.

Josh Adams, senior in secondary education, said this year's event will be bigger and better than ever.

"This year's showing will be done on an expanded scale. Last year we didn't have enough people to fill all of the parts, but this year we do," said Adams, who will play the part of Brad Majors during the event.

Adams, who said he fell in love with the event through seeing it in a live setting, said it really works as an improvisational show.

"Basically, it is a live show. As the movie plays, we act it out. There is no script and no rehearsal," Adams said.

Jennifer McDanel, senior in women's studies, will play the character of Magenta this year.

"I would encourage everyone to go. It's a lot of fun and you don't have to take it too seriously. It's a great opportunity to just dress up outrageously and have fun," McDanel said.

Beth Bailey, assistant director of the Union and program director for UPC, said the event should be enjoyable.

"The doors open at 10:30 p.m. at the Union Ballroom, and there is a $5 admittance fee. There are costume contests and auctions that begin at 10:30, and the show actually starts at midnight," Bailey said.

"There will also be goody bags to hand out that will contain newspapers, bags of rice, toast and playing cards. There is also a host who walks through the process," Bailey said.

This year marks the fifth year that Corbin Crable, graduate student in mass communications, is the host of the event.

"I serve as the host, and I will also portray the character of the Criminologist, who is the narrator in the movie," Crable said. "We will continue two traditions this year. We will still have a virgin auction at the beginning of the show, where we auction off all of the people who have never seen the show before. We also have a costume contest

Prison scandal

The highest-ranking soldier charged in the Abu Ghraib prison scandal was sentenced to eight years in prison for abusing inmates during a court martial Thursday in Baghdad. The sentencing came a day after Staff Sgt. Ivan "Chip" Frederick pleaded guilty. Story, Page 5

British troops

Prime Minister Tony Blair's government agreed Thursday to meet a U.S. request and redeploy a battalion of 850 British troops into central Iraq, despite strong opposition from lawmakers.

Conservative appeal

Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry said he bagged a goose on his swing-state hunting trip Thursday, looking to gain support from conservatives. Kerry adviser Mike McCurry said it's important to "get a better sense of John Kerry, the guy."

Your guide to this weekend's entertainment

Sarah Michelle Gellar in "The Grudge."

1 | DO YOU HOLD A GRUDGE?

While she doesn't reprise her role as Buffy in her new movie, "The Grudge," Sarah Michelle Gellar will still send chills up your spine.

The thriller chronicles a nurse who tries to unlock the mysteries behind a fatal illness that instills rage in its victims before killing them and spreading to another host.

"The Grudge," directed by Takashi Shimizu, opens in theaters nationwide today.

2 | DAMMIT, JANET

Hike up your fishnets, don't be stingy with the eyeshadow and get ready to do the Time Warp — "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is returning to K-State.

The movie — which stars Tim Curry and Susan Sarandon and was expected to bomb when it was released in the United States in 1975 — has exploded into a Halloween tradition. Attendees can dress up as their favorite gender-bending characters, shout back lines at the screen and enjoy pre-show events such as the costume contest and virgin auction.

The event, sponsored by the Union Program Council, begins at 10:30 tonight in the Union Ballroom. Admission is $5.

3 | HUSK THIS

Make sure you shake off that hangover Saturday in time for the K-State/Nebraska football game.

The Wildcats again will try to claim a victory after a loss to Oklahoma last weekend. The Cats broke a 30-year losing streak to the Cornhuskers when they beat Nebraska in 1998. Kickoff is 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

4 | SUMO SENSATION

In need of some cash? Try to win some — then wrestle it away from someone.

Union Program Council's AfterHours tonight offers a cash cube from 9 p.m. to midnight in the Union Courtyard, and participants also will have the chance to don sumo wrestling suits and hit the mats. If wrestling builds up your appetite, grab some free breakfast food at 10 p.m.

At midnight, if you don't want to party with the Rocky Horror crowd, catch a screening of "Hidalgo" in Forum Hall. The movie, starring Viggo Mortensen, tells the story of a 19th-century cowboy who enters himself and his horse in a race across the Arabian desert.

All AfterHours events are free and open to the public.

The weather grows colder as the fall winds blow,
And it's time for the party that all cowboys know,
It's that wildest of nights, in a class of its own,
For 66 years the legend has grown.

The original party, no other comes close,
A night for real cowboys with me as your host.
Some claim to have seen me, while others deny,
I'm the Ghost of Rouletter who never shall die.

When the night finally comes, and the beer starts to flow Pull down your hat and prepare for the show,
Tip up your drink and then have another,
And learn how to party like an AGR Brother.

Tonight is the night that never shall end,
For all AGR Brothers who dare to attend,
It's one crazy night that lives on forever,
It's the boots, the beer, the brothers together.

Signed,
The Rouletter Ghost

Senate considers tower proposal

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Legislation to construct a clock tower in the Bosco Student Plaza was introduced at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

The legislation proposes a $15,000 allocation from the Senate and, if passed at next week's Senate meeting, the tower will be constructed near the water fountains in the Bosco Student Plaza.

Tyson Moore, Student Senate vice chair, said the Allocations Committee has been working closely with the administration on the issue.

Moore said the administration has agreed to pay for labor, while other funds will come from private donations.

The total estimated cost of the tower exceeds $30,000.

A concern was raised about naming places and monuments after people who are still viable figures on campus and Eleri Griffin, Student Senate chair, said there is no written ordinance requiring that monuments be named after people who have left the university.

"The contributions are significant enough, and people seem to want it there after Bosco," Griffin said.

The bill allocating money to the Young Democrats for the Barbara Meyer Voter Education

Forum was referred to as "possibly controversial" by Blair Reynolds, Student Senate representative to the Faculty Senate.

The bill, however, was passed on a vote of 56-0-3. Reynolds said the educational benefits gathered from the event being funded was enough to pass the bill.

"They have the intentions to open up to both sides on the political spectrum and have invited all candidates," Reynolds said.

In other business, senators discussed the final preparations for Student Governing Association's Pack the Library, Pack the Polls event Oct. 27.

Governmental Relations Chair Matt King said senators should make a showing at the event in order to convince legislators of its importance.

The event is designed to increase awareness about higher education funding.

TO THE POINT County should favor possibility of wind turbines

Though the development of wind turbines in Riley County means altering the prairie landscape, in this case the winds of change are more positive than negative.

By producing an alternative energy source from the turbines, Kansans will benefit from less dependence on oil.

K-State researchers have acknowledged the potential threats to other parts of the ecosystem. But decreasing our dependence on other sources of oil will have the effect of improving conservation for other parts of the environment.

County commissioners, including Mike Kearns, should recognize the positive implications turbines offer.

Consider the machines a human-made, artistic contribution to the prairie that happens to provide a cleaner source of oil than what we rely upon.

Besides, if citizens disagree, they have the chance to voice their concerns to commissioners 7 p.m. Monday at City Hall, 1101 Poyntz Ave.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Language barriers Learning requires patience

"Teetah one equals teetah two," my friend's physics instructor informed the class. Just for clarity, he repeated the phrase: "Teetah one equals teetah two."

It wasn't until he wrote it on the board that my friend realized he meant theta.

LETA REPERT

Practically everyone on campus has or has heard a horror story about an instructor with less than stellar English skills.

Do college students complain too much, or is there a problem? The Kansas Board of Regents requires that graduate teaching assistants from other countries pass the SPEAK (Speaking Proficiency English Assessment Kit) or the TSE (Test of Spoken English) with a score of at least 50 (out of 60) on these tests before they are allowed to teach, according to the English Language Program's Web site.

The SPEAK basically is the same thing as the TSE, but it can be administered at the university, whereas the TSE can't.

Mary Wood, director of the English Language Program at K-State, said this test is very difficult, requiring students to quickly process information and respond in English.

There are problems with this test, Wood said, in that it doesn't require the kind of interaction of a teaching situation, and passing or failing can be determined by a student's test-taking ability.

However, Wood said most departments also require them to go through additional training.

"Most departments also have some sort of teaching activity," Wood said. She said these activities might consist of doing a presentation in a classroom setting.

Furthermore, Assessment and Program Review does surveys in the classes of new GTAs to ensure they are doing a good job, said Neena Gopalan.

If there is a problem, the GTA will be given a chance to improve, and, if there is still a problem, his or her department will be notified.

While the university seems to be doing an excellent job ensuring our GTAs speak English well, there remains the potential for a problem in that K-State does not require them to be tested in teaching situations.

While individual departments may test their GTAs in a classroom, K-State would do better to implement a program in which potential GTAs are required to teach a class and respond to student queries, as UCLA requires.

Wood said she recommends students talk to their GTA if they are having trouble understanding. The problem might be a language or cultural issue, but most GTAs want to be good teachers and are more than willing to do what is needed to correct the problem, Woods said.

As someone who is trying to learn a foreign language (Spanish), I have great respect for our international GTAs. Becoming proficient in a foreign language is difficult, and trying to balance teaching with taking graduate level classes full time is even more difficult.

And now that I think about it, what's the big difference between "teetah" and "theta," anyway? Either way, it's Greek to me.

Rock star's reality show stint reason enough to attend game

My ticket for the Nebraska game could have been sold for a good $20.

I could have used that money to buy groceries, gas, a night in Aggieville, or a pizza to enjoy while I listened to the game on the radio.

However, as of two days ago, I took my ticket off the market.

Not that I really want to see the game, especially considering Nebraska lost by 60 points a couple of weeks ago and we seem to be on a conference losing streak that is bordering on infinite.

No, I decided to keep my ticket and trudge the few blocks to the stadium for an entirely different reason — to see the University of Nebraska band.

I know, I know. We have a band that is outstanding. The pride of Wildcatland, if you will. But UNL's band seems to be boasting something right now with which our marchers can't even begin to compete.

It seems that rocker Tommy Lee (formerly of Motley Crue and Methods of Mayhem, and Pamela Anderson) has enrolled at Lincoln and is the newest member of their band's drum core, all of which are being documented for a new reality TV series for NBC, scheduled to air in July.

Lee enrolled two weeks ago and started his college experience by visiting the university bookstore to stock up on Nebraska gear. He even bought a foam cornhusker hat to sport on campus.

Apparently, Lee's stay in Lincoln is only for five weeks, enough material for, at least, six episodes, and it will follow the rocker to his three classes (chemistry, literature, and, of course, history of rock and roll).

He lives off campus and has a tutor, which is smart considering Lee is a high school drop out and after all the crazy alcohol and drug binges during his tenure with Motley Crue, he probably needs a little help with the few brain cells that didn't get killed.

When did '80s rock icons start enrolling in college? And why, pray tell, did Tommy Lee choose the desolate prairie that is Nebraska instead of the sheer gloriousness of K-State in Manhattan?

We have a lot to offer. If he was looking for easy classes, I heard that Geology 100 (nicknamed "Jocks with Rocks") is a pretty good choice. Or what about Intro to Wines? If anyone could ace a class based on the consumption and identification of alcohol, I'm pretty sure it would be Tommy Lee.

Or maybe he chose UNL over us because of their outstanding band program in general. I find that hard to believe, though.

Anyone who has gone to a football game and seen KSU band director Frank Tracz pumping up more than 200 marchers to play for more than three hours knows that is not true. And who wouldn't? I guess we will never know the real reason that the cornhuskers got the monopoly on cool instead of us (although, personally, I think Tommy Lee just threw a dart at a map).

However, scandal does follow scandal, and if anything happens during Lee's six-week stay, it is sure to be caught on camera and broadcast to the nation. Just picture it — Tommy Lee making out with an underage drunken sorority girl while still sporting the foam corncob on his head. Priceless.

In any case, I hope this trend of middle-aged '80s glam rockers going back to college will one day reach K-State. And I don't know about you, but I'm going to start lobbying for my own choice.

After all, it would be pretty cool to see Gene Simmons sit in on my human sexuality class.

K-State receives USDA grant

Food safety, sanitation to be focus of funded study

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A group of K-State faculty and graduate students wonder what causes the breakdown in sanitation in restaurants.

To solve the nagging question, they have applied for and been awarded a grant from the United States Department of Agriculture.

The three-year grant is valued at $482,765.

A team of faculty members applied for the grant, said Kevin Roberts, instructor in hotel, restaurant management and dietetics. He said they were the only food service group to receive the grant.

"I don't know how many people applied for the grant, but we were the only food service group to get it," Roberts said.

Betsy Barrett, associate professor of hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics, said the grant's purpose is to find why the knowledge people learn in food safety classes is not used properly in the field.

"We noted that the behaviors we saw in the field were different from what had been taught in class," Barrett said.

Barrett said three years will be spent with the grant to improve the knowledge to fieldwork training.

The grant also has involved Laura Brannon, associate professor in psychology, who will focus on the behaviors and attitudes people show in food service as an investigator.

"I'm hoping to help develop the survey measuring the extent to which food service workers engage in food safety practices and their beliefs concerning behaviors as well as the barriers," Brannon said.

Brannon said there are two graduate students working with the grant, one of whom is in psychology.

Roberts said the future of the grant is to focus on employers and employees in restaurants. He said once the plan is developed, they have hopes to teach training courses to restaurants across the nation.

"We'll look at attitudes, the subjective norms and what people do when they don't have the proper materials," Roberts said.

Barrett said the pilot testing of the study has begun and will include Kansas, Missouri and Iowa.

"We've studied these issues in class and people are not carrying them out properly in the field," Barrett said.

U.S. soldier sentenced to 8-year prison term

By Tini Tran
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The highest ranking soldier charged in the Abu Ghraib prison scandal was sentenced to eight years in prison for abusing inmates at Abu Ghraib during a court martial Thursday in Baghdad.

Staff Sgt. Ivan "Chip" Frederick, 38, an Army reservist from Buckingham, Va., was also given a reduction in rank, forfeiture of pay and a dishonorable discharge. The sentencing came a day after he pleaded guilty Wednesday to eight counts of abusing and humiliating Iraqi detainees.

It was the longest prison sentence yet in connection with the scandal that broke worldwide in April with the publication of photos and video that showed soldiers abusing Iraqis in the prison.

Frederick — a military policeman — acknowledged his part in the scandal.

But Frederick also blamed his chain of command, telling the court Wednesday that military intelligence officers ordered prisoners to be publicly stripped and degraded.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Wichita

Imagine a life totally devoted to Christ. A life where the rewards you seek are not of this earth. Imagine shunning materialism, realizing there's so much more to life when you follow in the footsteps of Jesus.

We are the sisters of St. Joseph. And it's true, our lives are radically different from the world around us. For ours is a community of vowed women committed to prayer, spiritual growth, and serving others.

We invite you to deepen your relationship with Jesus Christ and join us on our journey.

Talk about a radical way to live.

You may not be entirely certain. And with the many distractions in today's world, it's easy to get sidetracked. But if you listen to your inner voice — if you listen to your heart — you just might find that devoting your life to God as a Sister is the radical way you are being called to live.

Get this free CD-ROM from the Sisters of St. Joseph to help you find out if you've truly been called. To request your C.D., call Sister Karen Salsbery, Vocation Minister, or visit us online.

Red Sox deserve to win World Series

JAY DILLON

Put the champagne on ice and print the 2004 Major League Baseball Champion shirts and hats – the Boston Red Sox will win the World Series.

That's all you need to know. The Red Sox have everything going in their favor. They beat the New York Yankees after being down 3-0 in a best-of-seven series.

Though the Curse of Babe Ruth has not been lifted yet, Boston beat a team who Pedro Martinez referred to as "his daddy." Not only is Boston the first team to come back from 3-0 to win a playoff series, but they beat the evil empire in New York.

The Red Sox will open the World Series on Saturday at Fenway Park in Boston. Boston has everything, including karma, going in their direction.

There will be no Bucky "bleeping" Dent or Aaron "bleeping" Boone in the World Series to deter the Sox from capturing their first title in 86 years. There will be no Bill Buckner to miss a "can of corn" ground ball through his legs. There will be no ghost of the Bambino wandering throughout the historic grounds of Fenway Park.

Boston dismissed all of these possibilities by beating the Yankees. All New York teams have been effectively eliminated from postseason play, and the Sultan of Swat will have to take a winter off from torturing the Boston faithful.

I grew up a Cubs fan, so I feel the Red Sox fans' pain.

I know all about curses and jinxes and missed ground balls. I feel their anguish. I've seen terrible teams. I've also seen really good teams, but alas, my beloved Cubbies eliminated themselves in the last week of the season.

I've seen the good and the bad. I feel the curses that are on the team, and I've seen the "can of corn" ground balls mishandled.

I love the Cubs, and the Red Sox are growing on me. I cannot stand the Yankees, though. In fact, it's safe to say I hate the Yankees. They represent all that is evil in baseball. There is, in fact, a reason they are called the evil empire.

The Red Sox have not only beat the Yankees for Bostonians, but also for all the other Yankee-haters across the country.

Though this Sox team might have the worst hair in the Majors, for four straight games – when it really mattered – it had the best team in order to win the American League Pennant.

Johnny Damon had one RBI in games one through six, but had six in game seven – when it mattered. David Ortiz had two walk-off hits and batted .387 with three homeruns and 11 RBI.

Curt Schilling was down to one good leg after the tendon on his right ankle was dislocated and held the Yankees to one run in seven innings in game six.

All this over the mighty Yankees who have players the likes of Derek Jeter, Alex Rodriguez and Gary Sheffield, just to name a few.

For the first time in most everyone's lifetime, the Red Sox will win the World Series.

They will win and finally bring down the Curse of the Bambino. The Red Sox will bring the title to a historic town that, with the exception of Chicago, deserves it more than anyone else.

Go Red Sox, win the Series.

Volleyball team travels to Austin

By Kent Hildebrand
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's volleyball team travels Saturday to Texas in search of revenge after being swept Oct. 9 by the Longhorns at home.

No. 18 K-State heads into the rematch with a 13-6 record overall and 6-3 in Big 12 Conference play. The Wildcats are on a two-match win streak after sweeping Texas Tech and Baylor. No. 10 Texas is 16-2 overall and 8-2 in the Big 12 after dropping two straight to ranked squads from Texas A&M and Nebraska.

In the two teams' first meeting in Manhattan, the Longhorns had an answer for everything the Wildcats threw at them and won in three games, 30-24, 32-30 and 30-23. All-American outside hitter Mira Topic proved hard to stop, putting down 25 kills.

Coach Suzie Fritz said she thought her team didn't give its best effort in the last Texas match, but things will be different this time around.

"We've had some very solid practices," Fritz said. "We've worked harder in practice. We're putting importance on details, we're not letting those things slide. I think as a team we've grown a tremendous amount. It starts right here in practice and if we continue to work hard each and every day in practice, then the matches are easy."

Fritz said the Cats will have to do a better job against Topic, who is leading the conference in kills with 5.72 per game.

"She's going to get her kills, that's a given, so you have to control her," Fritz said.

The Horns also feature setter Michelle Moriarity (12.37 assists per game), middle blocker Bethany Howden (4.14 kills per game) and libero Alyson Jennings (3.55 digs per game).

For K-State, the match is a chance at redemption against a Top 10 team. Fritz said her team couldn't ask for anything better than that.

"These are the fun ones," Fritz said. "You get to go to battle with a great team. This is an opportunity for us to become a better volleyball team. We get to play a physical team, a good ball-control team that is very, very talented."

"We're going to have to give them everything we've got to hang in the match with them."

Men's golf travels to California to face packed field of competitors

Clay Hodge chips from the rough on the 380-yard, par-four 16th hole during the first round of the KU Invitational in September at Alvarado Golf Club in Lawrence. The Wildcats will compete in the Nelson Invitational held at Stanford University in Palo Alto, Calif.

The men's golf team is teeing off this morning in what Coach Tim Norris said is its most challenging tournament of the fall season – the Nelson Invitational.

Taking place at Stanford Golf Club in Palo Alto, Calif., the Nelson is host to a 16-team field, including No. 1 New Mexico, as well as four other top-50 teams. New Mexico boasts the top ranking in the country and the No. 1 player in the country, Spencer Levine. Georgia State, ranked 26th, claims the No. 2 player in Ryan Moore.

Senior Matt Van Cleave said he thinks it's important to go in open-minded.

"We've just got out and play as a team like we did at the Alister MacKenzie (Invitational)," Van Cleave said.

The team will bring the same line-up as they did to the MacKenzie. Van Cleave, senior Nick Schumacher, and juniors Ben Kern, Tyler Cummins and Jonathan James will represent K-State.

Norris said he's proud of their efforts.

"Jonathan and Nick have really stepped it up. I think both players, as well as the other three, are looking to have a good tournament," Norris said.

After a career-best finish at the MacKenzie, Schumacher said he also believes the competition will be heightened.

"The pressure of competing with the other teams in the region will be the most difficult aspect of this tournament," Schumacher said.

Though a team championship might be unlikely, Norris said K-State looks forward to playing the Stanford Golf Club.

"It's a beautiful course," Norris said. "It's a course you have to make good decisions at, though."

The course was ranked 88th in the world in 1993 by Golf Magazine.

Norris said one advantage for the team is the tournament is three days long.

"With only one round each day, it will help our players to make wise course management decisions," he said.

The high rough, Norris said, could also work in the Wildcats favor, as long as they avoid it.

"If we stay out of the rough and make a lot of putts, that could make the difference," he said.

MBB | Cats picked 9th in conference coaches poll

As has become customary in recent years, the K-State men's basketball team is forecasted to finish in the bottom half of the Big 12 Conference, according to conference coaches.

The Wildcats were picked to finish ninth in the preseason coaches' poll released Thursday.

Kansas and Oklahoma State tied for first in the poll, while Texas, Oklahoma and Missouri rounded out the top five.

K-State is set to play the EA Sports All-Stars Nov. 3 in an exhibition game in Bramlage Coliseum.

What: Fright Night 9 "Cats on the Prowl"

When: 6 p.m. Oct. 28

Where: Bramlage Coliseum

Fans of all ages are welcomed to join the K-State men's and women's basketball teams for a night of entertainment.

Young people will be able to trick-or-treat, both teams will be signing autographs and Willie the Wildcat will perform.

Fans should enter through the northwest doors of Bramlage Coliseum, and the first 750 children attending will receive a free T-shirt.

MLB | St. Louis advances on to World Series vs. Boston

ST. LOUIS — The best team in baseball now gets a chance to prove it in the World Series.

Albert Pujols hit a tying double, Scott Rolen followed with a home run and the St. Louis Cardinals suddenly erupted against Roger Clemens, startling the Houston Astros 5-2 Thursday night to take Game 7 of the NL championship series.

In a matchup where the home team won each time, the Cardinals broke through with two outs in the sixth inning. It came in a span of only two pitches, and Busch Stadium became a roiling sea of red.

Jeff Suppan overcame a lead-off home run by Craig Biggio to win an apparent mismatch against Clemens. The bullpen combined for three scoreless innings, shutting down Carlos Beltran and Co., with Jason Irlinghausen working the ninth for his third save.

MLB | Post-game celebration claims students' life

A college student died Thursday after suffering a head injury in a clash between police officers and a crowd of Red Sox fans who poured into the streets outside Fenway Park to celebrate their team's victory over the New York Yankees.

Victoria Snelgrove, a 21-year-old journalism major at Emerson College, was among 16 people hurt in the revelry. The injured also included a police officer.

Most of the injuries were minor, but Snelgrove suffered a severe head wound as police tried to subdue the crowd, authorities said. Mayor Tom Menino told WBZ-AM that she was struck by a "non-lethal weapon," but he did not elaborate.

Olympics | Panel rules in favor of Hamm

Sports' highest court rejected an appeal from a South Korean gymnast on Thursday, ruling that Paul Hamm is the rightful champion in the men's all-around competition at the Athens Games. The verdict is final and cannot be appealed.

The decision by a three-judge panel from the Court of Arbitration for Sport ends a tussle that began more than two months ago, when South Korea's Yang Tae-young claimed a scoring error had cost him victory. Yang asked the court to order international gymnastics officials to change the results and adjust the medal rankings accordingly, giving him the gold and Hamm the silver.

But the CAS panel dismissed the appeal, leaving Hamm with gold and Yang with bronze. Kim Dae-eun of South Korea will keep the silver. CAS arbitrators said the Korean protest was submitted too late and that CAS was not in a position to correct results anyway.

English equestrian squad to open season in Chicago

By Kelly Olson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend, several student-athletes will travel hundreds of miles to handle animals almost 12 times their weight.

The English squad of the K-State equestrian team is on the road this weekend to participate in the Northern Illinois Hunt Show on Saturday and Sunday in Chicago.

The show will be the season opener for the English squad. The Western squad had its season debut Oct. 9 at home, as they hosted the K-State Western Show and captured first place.

One of the two captains for the English team, senior Christy Conforti, said she predicts the team will do very well.

"I think the team is pretty well-prepared. Our coach has really been cracking down on us and making us realize how important this show will be and how our competition has gotten a lot harder and better," Conforti said.

K-State is a member of Zone 9, Region 2, along with nine other teams.

Conforti said she thinks K-State definitely has an advantage being the only varsity team in their region. The other teams are all club sports.

"Without K-State, a lot of people would not be able to do this sport in college," Conforti said. "We are really lucky to have the school pay for travel fees, rooms, entry fees and other expenses."

The Wildcats prepare by having two, one-hour practices a week where they focus on strengthening their skills.

Senior Dehli Burdan, the team will be good this year because some vital spots were filled by newcomers.

"I think they will really pull through for us this weekend. I think this weekend will be good," Burdan said.

Equestrian is the newest sport to K-State, as it is only in its fifth year at the varsity level.

"I think that it's such a new and different sport that I think it would be neat if a lot of people came to get involved," Burdan said.

Meghan Cunningham, assistant coach of the team and coach of the English squad, agreed with Burdan that people do sometimes have misconceptions of the sport and would like more people to come to the shows, as well.

"People overlook the fact that the horses are athletes as well as the students," Cunningham said. "They should appreciate the fact of how hard it really is to ride a horse over a course of eight fences at three-foot height that you have never ridden before."

Cunningham said she thinks the team should do well this weekend, especially with six returning members out of seven who participated on the national team two years ago.

Swing City Jazz series continues

By Christin E. Kuchem
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jazz can be a way for performers to express their passion.

Kansas City jazz pianist Charles Williams said he began his passion for music at a young age and modeled his influences from different styles.

Williams
PIANIST

"Ramsey Lewis was one (influence) because when I was eight or nine, I heard his song 'Incrowd.' I thought it was so awesome. And also Oscar Peterson. Man, this guy is crazy terrific," Williams said.

Williams will perform for the third Swing City Jazz concert series at 8 tonight at the Manhattan Arts Center.

Wayne Goins, music professor, created the Swing City Series as an outlet for local jazz enthusiasts.

"This will be the third out of four concerts in the fall series. We present four concerts per season," Goins said. "I try to bring a different variety of artist for each series."

Williams said he has a diverse repertoire.

"I am versatile as far as music, but gospel and jazz are my fortes," Williams said.

His stop tonight is one of a handful of visits he has made to the Manhattan area in recent years.

"I have been to Manhattan on several occasions," Williams said. "I have performed with Dr. Goins and several Kansas City musicians at the Manhattan Arts Banquet. I have also been a featured guest artist at the MAC as well."

"Every time I have performed here I have had a blast. The people of Manhattan are so friendly and warm. A very great experience."

Williams has developed a sound, making a name for himself playing at major venues in the Kansas City metro area.

Goins said Williams isn't just limited to music.

"Besides his music, he is involved in helping out with a lot of community projects in Kansas City. He also teaches music with his own music studio," Goins said.

As a member of the MAC Board of Directors, Goins said he is proud of the turnout the series has received.

"The MAC is the best place to hear jazz in Manhattan," Goins said. "All of the previous concerts have been very successful. Usually, the house is packed. People from Kansas City even come to hear some of our performers."

Williams said Friday's concert-goers should expect both solo and accompanied performances.

"I will maybe do one or two solo sections. But the musicians with me are Steve Rigazzi on bass, my dear friend Dr. Wayne Goins on guitar, and local Manhattan drummer Kurt Gartner," Williams said.

Executive director of the MAC, Penny Senften, said the atmosphere is part of the series' attraction.

"The Manhattan Arts Center is a very nice atmosphere. It will be a very relaxed show. We try to keep it as relaxed as possible here," Senften said.

"People should be set to come and hear music from the heart," Williams said.

"What comes from the heart, goes to the heart. I am sure they will be in for a treat. I am a down-to-earth guy that loves to use this God-given gift to make others feel good."

Twelfth Night, 21st century

The Aquila Theatre Co. is coming to Manhattan for the second year in a row.

Aquila will perform the Shakespeare play, "Twelfth Night," at 7 p.m. Sunday at McCain Auditorium.

Thom Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain, said the play will be set in modern times, just as was last year's production of "Othello."

"When they did 'Othello,' rather than being set in the 17th century, they brought it up to the 20th century," he said. "The dress and time will be modern day (for 'Twelfth Night'). The story is still as fresh as it was then."

"Shakespeare can be set in modern times, because the themes are still prevalent," Jackson said.

"There's still deception and mystery and romance," he said. "He wrote really for the masses. He wrote for the average person to understand."

The "Twelfth Night" is ultimately a comedy featuring cross-dressers and other laughter-driven predicaments, he said.

Jackson said he expects "Twelfth Night" to be well received.

"We try to present a Shakespeare play every year. The community seems to love it," he said. "It is a comedy. I think people will find it very funny."

"It's in true British humor, and people love British humor."

Aquila isn't the only company that does modern-day Shakespeare, but Jackson said Aquila is different, because they are strong in education.

"What sets them apart from the rest is their residency activities and their focus on education," he said.

Before the play, Don Hedrick, professor of English, will give a talk about the play, "Shakespeare and the time period," at 6 p.m. in McCain 204.

Then, Aquila will have a workshop from 12:30 to 2 p.m. Monday at Nichols Theatre.

The workshop will be for the Theatre Forum and Advanced Acting Shakespeare classes, but Kate Anderson, director of theatre, said anyone can attend to observe as long as they stay the entire time.

Anderson said different people have held workshops in her classes before.

"We've had guests come in to do this type of thing before," she said. "Anytime students can work with other people is great. It's always very invigorating to have outside people come in."

Robert Richmond, director of "Twelfth Night," said Aquila tries to have workshops with all their production, both Shakespearean and non. Aquila is traveling around performing "The Invisible Man" by H.G. Wells.

"We have a large education program with both productions," he said. "It's very useful and very interesting."

Teaching about Shakespeare can help people have a better appreciation for it, he said.

"The language is not as difficult as once thought," Richmond said. "It's very entertaining."

Aquila also likes to revisit places they have been before, he said, so they are glad to be coming back to Manhattan.

"Quite often that's good because we like to build an audience. We can build a relationship with the community," Richmond said.

"I think it's very good our work is being seen in the same community."

Making a clean break is difficult

A few weeks ago, I started seeing someone new. We went out a few times and got along well. He was nice and easy to talk to.

Things were fine, but I just didn't think things were going to work out. I decided it was best if we went our separate ways. I just needed to tell him that. But how?

How do you end it with someone you're not seeing seriously?

There are two options: step up and tell the person that it isn't working out. Or you could take the low road and ignore their phone calls until they get the message.

The direct approach is the more noble approach. People appreciate honesty, so being honest and forthright when ending things is the best way to go, right?

By telling the person you're seeing that the relationship isn't going to work, you'll avoid the awkwardness that occurs when you see them after not answering their phone calls for weeks — no stammering out an excuse about why you've been unavailable.

Being honest will get everything out in the open, and maybe you will be able to still be friends (yeah, right).

The thing about honesty is, it's not always possible to be completely honest about why it's not going to work.

Say, for example, the person you're seeing isn't bad looking, but you don't feel much sexual chemistry — you can't imagine doing anything more than kissing. Are you going to tell them that's why you're ending it? No. Situations like this call for certain stretches of the truth. You need a plausible, sensitive reason for ending it — one that doesn't make the other person feel they did anything wrong.

Reasons like, "I'm not looking for a relationship," or "My life's too hectic now," work for most occasions. They're believable and leave the other person's feelings relatively intact.

But beware, there are smart ones out there who see through your excuses.

They know "it's not you, it's me," means it is you, and "I don't think our personalities match," translates to "Your personality sucks."

Times like these are when avoiding someone until they get the hint looks good. You don't have to think of how to tell them. A few unanswered phone calls and the problem is solved.

Some might argue that cutting someone out like this, with no warning or reason, is harsh. They're left spending sleepless nights wondering what went wrong or what they did.

My rationale is, people will be easier on themselves than you might be. They can easily assume you're a bitch or a jerk. You were intimidated by their awesomeness and weren't good enough for them anyway. Whatever they tell themselves, you're to blame.

The major problem with letting them get the hint is that sometimes, they just don't. You might have to suffer through weeks of relentless calls and messages before they give up.

Then you think telling the truth wouldn't have been so bad.

It's never easy to end a relationship with someone. If you're wondering what to do, just go with your instinct.

If you're not brave enough to tell them like it is, don't sweat it. They'll stop calling in a few days (hopefully) and probably won't need therapy to get over you.

As for me, I took the chicken way out. I didn't return a phone call, cut our next conversation short, and that was it.

If you are that guy and you're reading this, sorry I wasn't brave enough to tell you. I couldn't handle the awkward scene. Let's wait until the next time I see you at a party.

Cosby gives parenting speech in Wisconsin

Bill Cosby won cheers as he carried a serious message to the city's black community, urging parents to take up the responsibility of educating and raising their children.

"It's not all right for your 15-year-old daughter to have a child," the comedian said Wednesday night.

Cosby was warmly received by a crowd of about 2,400 people at North Division High School in Milwaukee's inner city.

He said parents shouldn't leave the responsibility of raising their children to television and CDs.

"These are your children," Cosby said. "You're supposed to raise them."

Jet flyover set for football game

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four A-10 planes flown by Air Force pilots will be seen before Saturday's football game against Nebraska.

Major Brian Borgen, 1988 K-State graduate, is among the pilots flying above KSU Stadium.

"It's a real enjoyable experience for all of us," Borgen said.

He said the main purpose of the flyover is to recruit people and let them know the opportunities available to ROTC students.

"We also want to make people aware of what are troops are doing overseas and keep a strong emphasis on the situation abroad," Borgen said.

Col. Mitch Dodd, Air Force ROTC detachment commander and professor of aerospace studies, said it's an opportunity for pilots to show ROTC cadets what can be done in the Air Force.

"It's nice for our cadets to see a former graduate and hear about the experiences they've had," Dodd said.

"Students can relate to knowing they were here at K-State, and they see the air power fly by. Usually people think we just do marching, but this proves there is much more in the Air Force than just that."

Dodd said cadets were able to ask questions of the pilots and walk around the planes after last year's flyover. He said the pilots will not be available to talk to cadets this year due to time constraints.

Borgen said he enjoys the involvement with his alma mater.

"The cadets can identify with me and know that it's doable to do the pilot thing in the Air Force," Borgen said.

WIND FARMS | Locals debate merits of restrictions

wind energy in general, but they feel it should be subject to the same critical scrutiny as any other type of development.

"We can do these same projects in areas that are not in the core of the Flint Hills and so that from our opinion, it's ill-advised to seek to locate them where they're inappropriate," he said. "I think it's unfortunate and distressing in many ways that the argument seems to be framed in many ways as either 'we can have wind energy' or 'we can't,' and that's not the case."

Jerry Lonergan, former director of Kansas Electric Utilities Research Program, said wind farms can be a valuable resource in Kansas, and while there are some environmental concerns, the facilities are largely eco-friendly.

"There has been a substantial amount of research that shows the impact is not severe on the bird population," Lonergan said.

He said, especially in the Flint Hills area, there are concerns the turbines would adversely affect rare prairie chicken habitats.

"K-State Research is showing that wind turbines do impact the habitat of rare prairie chicken," Lonergan said. "But, by the same token, cattle grazing and prairie burning have already had a detrimental effect on the environment that prairie chickens live in."

He said the environmental effects would be minimal.

"While it is a human kind intrusion into the environment, I think increasingly the evidence is showing that the impact is minimal," Lonergan said.

County Commissioner Al Johnson said the Commission sent the issue to the planning board seven or eight months ago so some inadequacies in the law could be revisited.

Johnson said he felt the original regulations, which allowed citizens living near an approved site to protest within 30 days, was inadequate because it did not require builders to wait until the 30 days had elapsed to begin construction.

Monty Wedel, director of planning and development for Riley County, said according to the current statute persons living within 1,000 feet of the structure can draft a petition protesting construction. In order to be considered, the petition requires signatures from at least 20 percent of those living in the affected area.

Johnson said he believes this provision applied to city areas, which are affected differently than rural areas, and thus should be expanded.

Despite these concerns, he said he does not want the wind farms to be prohibited.

"In the meeting last week, (Riley County Commissioner Mike) Kearns had indicated that, when it comes up this week, he is going to make a motion to ban wind farms in Riley County, period," he said. "I made it known to him that I would not support that."

Johnson, who represents the northern part of the county, said the issue has only applied to extreme southeast portions of the county, which Kearns represents.

"I represent 80 percent of the rural area, mostly to the north of Manhattan," he said. "I'm not interested in taking away the rights of the farmers and ranchers up there to at least have some consideration."

He said he would want to have more hearings before anything was decided about a ban.

"I won't agree to a ban on wind farms at this point," Johnson said.

where we judge the costumes and give prizes out based on the most original costumes," Crable said.

Crable said they wrap up the pre-show events with a game.

During the film, audience members are encouraged to shout out lines at the screen. The goody bags also contain props the audience uses during certain points in the show.

However, certain props will not be permitted in the Union said Ben Hopper, program adviser for the Union.

"We cannot allow live animals, hot dogs, or water guns to be brought into the Ballroom," Hopper said.

Crable said he encourages everyone to attend the event.

"The first time you see this movie in a group setting you think that it's terrible. But if you lose your inhibitions, it's just plain fun," Crable said.

Adams said people who haven't seen it, should check it out.

"When else are you allowed to go to the Union in only a garter belt if you are a man?" Adams said.

In 1990, de Passe was inducted into the Black Filmmakers Hall of Fame. De Passe is known for such works as "Lady Sings the Blues," which she cowrote and received an Academy Award nomination.

She has won two Emmy Awards and an NAACP Image Award.

Studies, and Diversity and Dual Career Development worked with the Office of the President to bring de Passe to K-State.

President Jon Wefald caught the attention of de Passe with an essay he wrote about the Negro League Baseball. De Passe and Wefald are negotiating a television movie based on that essay, Wefald said.

Myra Gordon, associate provost of Diversity and Dual Career Development, said she was excited because it's not everyday someone of such caliber visits K-State.

Valentine said de Passe puts a different face to success.

"I hope they gain insight into the struggles of a successful individual," Valentine said. "We aren't always provided an opportunity to see successful people that look like us."

VIOLATIONS | Greek houses cited for food left in refrigerator

Scott Jones, director of Greek Affairs, said it is not unusual for an organization with a kitchen to be followed up by inspectors.

Jones said the greek houses are owned and run by private corporations and will address the citations through their own means.

"If they don't let the problems continue and make the improvements in a reasonable amount of time, then without something catastrophic they would not be eating anything harmful," Jones said.

Grant Helmers, president of FarmHouse fraternity, said the food in the refrigerator was older than accepted by health safety inspectors and was a mistake on the part of the crew serving dinner.

"We only had the one violation, and our cook is not at fault. We just forgot to take something out of the refrigerator that was two days too old," Helmers said.

Helmers said he wanted to stress that the violation is not dangerous — just a small mistake.

"We write the dates on the saran wrap covering the food, it was only a small mistake that it wasn't thrown away," Helmers said.

Betsy Barrett, associate professor in hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics, said she doesn't think the infractions are too worrisome.

"These are just examples of one moment in time," Barrett said.

Course: FSHS 700: Conflict Resolution: Core Skills & Strategies

Dates: 25 October – 18 December 2004

Time: 1800-2000, Monday and Wednesday

Location: Building 7285, Digital Training Center, Room 2

Credit: 3 credit hours

Cost: $262.00 per graduate credit hour
$192.00 per undergraduate credit hour

Course Description

This course presents communication theories and interpersonal skills relevant to conflict resolution, including the understanding, analysis, and management of conflict. This course focuses on the relational, emotional, and substantive aspects of conflict, and includes the influences of anger, gender, culture, power, and forgiveness at the interpersonal, group, community, and global levels. The classroom approach course is pragmatic as well as theoretical, and presents communication and conflict resolution skills, models, and procedures in a practice-based approach. Completion of the course will meet the Kansas Office of Dispute Resolution's training requirements for approval in core mediation.

This course will be the first course of a 12-Semester Hour Graduate Certificate Program in Conflict Mediation currently being developed. The course is also offered for undergraduate credit.

Ruth Stanley from K-State will be available Wed. afternoons from 1300-1600 in Building 215, Room 131, starting 29 September 04 to provide more information to interested students.

A gathering of the faithful

Diehard K-State fans continue tailgating ways

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's been a while since the K-State faithful went home happy after a football game.

But Nilwon Kraushaar and his wife, Donna, remember a time when losing was the norm.

"It was in Old Stadium then," Donna said. "They couldn't beat a good high school team."

In the 1950s when the couple attended K-State, tickets weren't hard to find and bowl games weren't even discussed.

"We'd sit on the 50-yard line, at the top," Nilwon said. "They won a couple of games in the four years I was here, but not many."

The Kraushaars drive from Frankfort, Kan., to tailgate with friends, Don and Joan McCall, before each game. The McCalls drive three and a half hours from Phillipsburg, Kan., to cheer on the Cats.

They come to every game, win or lose, and have attended eight bowl games.

Joan said she isn't worried about the team's losing record.

"I've got faith," she said.

Manhattan resident Rick Garvin said he doesn't consider the season lost.

"I've seen a lot more losses than I've ever seen wins," Garvin, a 1971 K-State graduate, said.

The Garvin family tailgates before each game. As he played football with his 4-year-old niece, Tess, who has been to every game since she was born, he wonders about the fans who abandon the team in hard times.

"You have to stay the course and be supportive," he said.

But to some who haven't seen K-State play for decades, losing is a new feeling. Brian Myers, who tailgated with friends before the Oklahoma game Saturday, said the season has been disappointing but he has hope for a turnaround.

"It's good to just come and see good football," Myers, senior in education, said. "Don't get me wrong, if an OU guy walked up to me and offered me $200 for my ticket, I'd give it to him."

Rebekah Urban, senior in education, said the loss to KU was especially hard to take because friends from KU kept calling to rub it in.

"We're over it," she said. "We mourned it, and now we're over it."

For others, the games are about the atmosphere or starting a tradition.

Freshmen Eric Schmidt and Chris Morrill got together with friends and wore bathrobes to the Oklahoma game. They arrived at 4 a.m. to stand in line.

"I've been a fan all my life," Morrill said.

The tailgating, the noise and the friends are what make the game for Myers.

"I bleed purple, and the beer tastes good," he said.

There is still hope to pull the season around, though.

"I still think we've got a good team. We've been beating ourselves," Luke Goodrich, 2003 graduate, said.

"I don't know if we'll make it to the Big 12 Championship game but we'll win enough to get to a bowl!"

And if K-State football can't win again this season?

"I will try out for football next year," Morrill said.

A must win for K-State

This year's game against Nebraska is big for both teams.

Fast facts K-State versus Nebraska

- This is the first time since 1968 that both K-State and Nebraska will square off as unranked opponents.
- The Wildcats have won the last two games against the Cornhuskers, outscoring them 87-32.
- Prior to K-State's 1998 40-30 win against Nebraska, the Cornhuskers had won 29 straight games against the Wildcats dating back to 1969.
- In the last two years, running back Darren Sproles has averaged 147.5 yards per game against Nebraska.
- The last time the Cornhuskers beat the Wildcats at KSU Stadium was in 1996.
- K-State can only lose one game the rest of the season to extend its streak of bowl appearances to 12.

Big 12 rivalry undergoes changes

Cats, Huskers ready for matchup

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Much of Saturday's game between K-State and Nebraska will have the same feel as past games.

The teams will still wear the same colors; K-State will line up wearing purple and white. Nebraska will be sporting scarlet and cream.

The game still figures to be 60 minutes of an all-out battle between two programs that have combined to win 100 Big 12 games since the league was formed in 1996.

But when K-State plays host to Nebraska this time around, there will be some big differences.

For the first time since 1968, neither team is ranked. Nebraska, with first-year coach Bill Callahan, no longer runs an option-based offense. K-State sits in a tie for last in the Big 12 North with a 2-4 record and for the first time in 11 years, the game will not be televised.

None of that matters to the players though.

Senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said the game with Nebraska is always important, no matter what the circumstances are.

"I think it's been the biggest rivalry since I've been here," Berry said. "For us especially, this game is very important to us. This is as big a rivalry as it was when I first got here."

The game was hardly a rivalry until K-State won 40-30 in 1998. Nebraska had beaten the Wildcats 29 straight times from 1969-97. The Huskers still have a commanding lead of the overall series, owning a 14-72-2 record against the Wildcats.

However, in recent years, K-State has flipped the coin on the Huskers. Since 1998, K-State has a 5-2 record against Nebraska, with the most recent win a 38-9 blowout in Lincoln last season. The Wildcats have won two in a row, and with a win Saturday, will have their first three-game winning-streak ever in the series.

Senior tight end Brian Casey said the Wildcats are no longer intimidated by Nebraska.

"I'm 3-1 against them so far and we expect to beat them now," Casey said. "Now, I just feel we have the confidence that we can beat Nebraska, and they are not the bigger

The Wildcats need help. With five Big 12 Conference games remaining on the schedule and every North Division team mathematically still in the hunt for the title, the Wildcats (2-4, 0-3) are hoping to help themselves as they take on division-rival Nebraska (4-2, 2-1), 1:10 p.m. Saturday at KSU Stadium.

"I think we dismissed ourselves from the opportunity to totally control our own destiny after this last ball game (against Oklahoma)," Coach Bill Snyder said. "The obvious answer is every team in the conference still has a chance, and that doesn't preclude Kansas State, but it's an uphill battle and you have to have some help."

The game between K-State and Nebraska will mark the 89th time the two schools have played each other, with the Cornhuskers leading the all-time series 72-14-2. Despite Nebraska's lead, K-State has won four of the last six meetings, including wins in the past two seasons.

First-year Nebraska coach Bill Callahan said every game for his team is a must win, but divisional games are a priority.

"The most important thing for us is divisional games," Callahan said. "These games really take on an increased importance."

The Cornhuskers, tied atop the Big 12 North with Missouri, bounced back from their worst loss in school history Oct. 9 at the hands of Texas Tech, with a 59-27 win over Baylor a week later.

In the win, sophomore quarterback Joe Dailey passed for a school record 342 yards and tied the single-game school passing touchdowns record with five. Junior running back Cory Ross also had a solid day, rushing for 51 yards and a touchdown and catching two passes for 77

The (Mid)West Coast offense

First-year coach revamps Nebraska's run-oriented offense

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 115 years of college football at Nebraska, the storied program never had a quarterback throw for more than 300 yards in a single game — until Oct. 16.

In a 59-27 win over Baylor, sophomore quarterback Joe Dailey became the first Cornhusker to do so, throwing for 342 yards and five touchdowns.

In his first year as coach, former Oakland Raiders head man Bill Callahan has thrown out the option/run-oriented playbook that dominated Husker football for decades and brought in the

What is the West Coast offense?

The West Coast offense, created by Hall of Fame coach Bill Walsh, is an offense based on passing to set up the run. To be run efficiently, the quarterback needs to be able to make quick reads and have an accurate arm. Receivers also need to have the ability to run short, timed patterns, usually outs or quick slants. Tight ends must be good receivers and be able to catch balls over the middle, and running backs must be able to come out of the backfield to make receptions. The West Coast offense does not require large linemen, but rather agile players who can run traps, counters or sweeps.

West Coast offense centered around the short-passing game.

"It's different and unique, and yet you take each year as it comes and each game as it comes, but particularly for me having been with Nebraska during the Big 8 as well as the Big 12 Conference, it's just a different feel," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Through the first six games of the season, the Cornhuskers attempted 182 passes for 1,286 yards compared to just 192 attempts for 1,422 yards in 13 games in 2003. Nebraska is fifth in the Big 12 in passing yardage, gaining 214.3 yards through the air per game.

For this year's match-up between Nebraska and K-State, Snyder said he has tossed aside the old tapes of the Cornhuskers.

"You scrutinize them a little bit just in terms of personnel, but by and large, the rest of the tapes were not of any great value to us," Snyder said.

Despite Nebraska's early struggles with the new offensive system, throwing for 200 yards or more just twice,

Radio: Mid-America Sports Network

History: Nebraska leads the overall series 72-14-2. In their last matchup, K-State won 38-9 in Lincoln.

PLAYER TO WATCH

Darren Sproles carried the ball 13 times for 34 yards in last week's loss to Oklahoma. With the status of starting quarterback Dylan Meier uncertain, Sproles will have to turn his game up another notch against the No. 2 ranked rush defense in the nation.

The quarterback shuffle

If Meier can't play, Snyder should consider lifting Evridge's redshirt Coach Bill Snyder could face one huge dilemma Saturday. With the Cornhuskers rolling into town, the stakes in this rivalry are as high as ever, even if the Wildcats' record (2-4, 0-3) leaves much to be desired.

K-State desperately needs a win over North Division co-leader Nebraska, as a loss would force the Wildcats to win out in the regular season if they hope to make a bowl game for the 12th straight year.

K-State desperately needs sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier.

Meier proved once again last week that, when healthy, he can run an offense with the best of 'em, as he threw for 242 yards and a touchdown in the Wildcats' hard-fought loss to Oklahoma.

Harassed all day by a tenacious Sooners defense, Meier was knocked out cold and out of the game in the fourth quarter with a vicious hit.

This week, Snyder, as is customary, would not say whether or not Meier would play against Nebraska.

This is a problem.

If Meier is good to go, the Wildcat offense should roll over a Husker defense that gave up 70 points to Texas Tech two weeks ago.

However, if Meier is still feeling the effects of that jarring hit and can't go, we will most likely see sophomore quarterback Allen Webb get the start.

This should have K-State fans a little worried.

Webb, who showed promise in the Spring Game way back when, has struggled greatly with the offense when he's gotten snaps this year. In his starts against Fresno State and Kansas, and recently in the fourth quarter against Oklahoma, Webb looked absolutely lost receiving plays from the coaches and running the offense.

Webb's statistics have been far from great. Touted as an athletic, dual-threat transferring in from Indiana University, Webb has completed just 39 percent of his passes and has rushed for a total of 26 yards this season.

Maybe Webb can turn it around. He seems like a good guy who genuinely wants to make himself and the team better, but right now we haven't seen results.

So this begs a question. If Meier can't go Saturday — and I think I speak for everybody when I say, I really, really hope he can — what does Snyder do?

What about pulling true freshman Allan Evridge's redshirt?

I know, there's some major negatives to doing this, and, honestly, I don't expect Snyder to do it. If Evridge plays, that's it, you can't say, "hey, just kidding," and put a redshirt back on. It's a legitimate question to ask if it'd be worth it to pull a guy's redshirt just to be a backup quarterback.

But maybe it's worth it.

Evridge, a Nebraska native who spurned the Huskers, by many accounts has all the talent in the world. Prior to the season, K-State coaches couldn't sing the freshman's praises enough for his ability to learn the offense so quickly to go along with his physical tools.

If Meier can't play, the Wildcat offense is sputtering with Webb at the helm and the Cats find themselves down to Nebraska, it might be time to take a chance on Evridge.

The Wildcats simply cannot afford a loss and if Snyder knows that Evridge can come in and be successful, Snyder should seriously consider pulling the redshirt.

It's all in Snyder's hands.

He knows what's best for the team, and I don't think anybody should go crazy if Evridge stays on the sidelines for the whole year.

But if the Cats are on the verge of defeat and Evridge can help them pull out the must-win game, it should be strongly-considered.

Then again, Meier could start Saturday and all this discussion can be tossed aside for the time-being.

Wouldn't that be great?

GAMETIME

Edge

OFFENSE

Edge

With the ground game pretty much grounded (last in Big 12 Conference play, generating a paltry 61 yards per game in three conference games), the Wildcats have turned to quarterback Dylan Meier. So far, the Wildcats have the second-best passing offense in the conference in Big 12 play. K-State's success will depend on the health of Meier, but don't forget Darren Sproles. Despite early struggles in conference play, in the two previous meetings against the Huskers, he has gone for over 100 yards.

The newly-instituted West Coast offense has been a work in progress for the Cornhuskers, and don't look for that to change Saturday. Quarterback Joe Dailey averages 212.3 yards passing per game with 14 touchdowns passes and 12 interceptions on the season. Running back Cory Ross averages 95.7 yards rushing per game and tight end Matt Herian is the leading receiver, with 23 catches and three touchdowns. They put up 59 points on Baylor, but only 14 and 10 against Kansas and Texas Tech.

DEFENSE

Although it still gave up 31 points, the K-State defense was much-improved against one of the nation's better offenses in Oklahoma. Still, there are issues. The Cats are last in the Big 12 in red-zone defense, as conference opponents have scored all 12 times inside the K-State 20-yard line, including 10 touchdowns. Also, opposing offenses convert on third down almost 40 percent of the time against K-State. Last year, the defense held Nebraska, to one touchdown.

The once-fearsome "Black Shirts" aren't scaring anybody after getting torched for 70 points a couple of weeks ago against Texas Tech. The Huskers do have star players — linebacker Barrett Ruud and the Bullocks brothers in the secondary. Strong safety Daniel has four interceptions and free safety Josh has 31 tackles. It would be hard enough to stop Sproles, but now the Huskers face a throwing K-State team. Not good news for a team ranked last in conference play in pass defense, giving up 317 yards on average.

SPECIAL TEAMS

Kicker Joe Rheem still provides plenty of consistency, having only missed one field goal and no extra-point attempts all year. After that, the special teams have been uncharacteristically poor. They average 16.6 yards per return on kickoffs in Big 12 play and only 1.6 yards per punt return, poor enough for last in the conference.

The Huskers average 21.1 yards on kickoff returns, 7.1 yards on punt returns and 38.2 yards per punt this season. Kick returner Brandon Jackson does lead the conference with 29 yards per return and place kicker Sandro DeAngelis is 3-6 this year on field goals. Overall, it's not a stellar unit, but it could still be the better one on Saturday.

PREDICTION: K-STATE 34 - NEBRASKA 20

Both teams need this win desperately. K-State: has the home field advantage, and like the past two years, the better team.

Still, this game comes down to a healthy Dylan Meier. Here's hoping he will be.

Archer adjusts, plays strong

Sophomore linebacker steps up play versus Sooners

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jason White probably had a bad case of déjà vu last Saturday. The Heisman trophy-winning Oklahoma quarterback took a snap from center, felt pressure and heaved a hurried pass.

Waiting was a K-State linebacker, who picked the pass from out of the air and went untouched to the endzone for a touchdown.

There were some differences though. Instead of the Big 12 Championship Game at Arrowhead Stadium, the game was at KSU Stadium, and this time K-State came up short against Oklahoma, 31-21.

The linebacker who picked off the pass was sophomore Brandon Archer, who has been a steady force on K-State's defense.

Archer said the interception was just a matter of being in the right place at the right time.

"The coverage was designed for me to be out in the flats, and I just got out there a little faster than usual," Archer said. "It happened so fast. I turned back and looked — there's the ball right there, and the next thing I know, I'm in the endzone."

The interception was the exclamation point on a career day for Archer, K-State's starting strong-side linebacker. He was second on the team with 10 tackles against the Sooners. For the season, Archer is second only to junior linebacker Marvin Simmons in total tackles with 35 stops to Simmons' 37.

Coach Bill Snyder said Archer's play in the last few weeks has been encouraging.

"I like the way Brandon is playing. I really do," Snyder said. "He is playing with a little more confidence, he has a good understanding of what we're doing, and he has developed the ability to help people that are around him. I think he's growing in the right direction."

Archer came into the season as somewhat of an unknown on the defense. Archer was seen by some as simply a replacement for departed senior Brian Hickman.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said Archer has performed above expectations.

"He's been a real bright spot for us," Elliott said. "But he's been progressively getting better. That gives us reason to feel like the future is in good shape."

Originally, Archer was on the opposite side of the field at the weak-side linebacker spot. With Wildcat coaches looking to put the talented Simmons on the field, Archer was asked to make the move to the strong-side at the beginning of the season.

Snyder said the switch to the strong-side can be a difficult one to make, but Archer handled the move well.

"(The move) put him in a position to have to line up differently than he did normally," Snyder said. "It was different, but he's taken to it. He's a team guy. He'll do whatever it is you want him to do."

Archer said he is starting to settle in at his position, but knows he can improve.

"I feel a lot more comfortable," Archer said. "I'm getting into the flow of things. I think the biggest thing for me is trying to be more consistent in my play."

WILDCATS | Importance of Nebraska game not lost on K-State

"It is a very important game for both of us in the Big 12 North," senior tight end Brian Casey said. "It's still mathematically possible to win the North, so it's a big game and whenever you have a home game against Nebraska, you always want to beat them."

The Wildcats dropped their third-straight conference game last Saturday with a 31-21 loss to No. 2 Oklahoma, even though sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier registered his third-straight game with at least 200 yards passing.

Meier finished the day completing 20-of-38 passes for 242 yards and one touchdown, before being knocked out of the game in the fourth quarter.

Sophomore Jermaine Moreira led the Wildcat receivers with seven catches for 85 yards.

Although the Wildcat/Husker showdown has Big 12 North title implications, this year's game will mark the first time in 11 years the contest will not be on television and the first time neither team is ranked in either major poll since 1968.

Defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the game is still important for both teams.

"Every game now for us is a huge game, and we have to keep getting better and play at a higher level, and we have to do it every week," Elliott said.

The Wildcats' consecutive bowl game appearance-streak is also on the line against the Cornhuskers.

K-State has made a trip to a bowl game for 11 consecutive years and will have to win four of its last five games to become bowl eligible for the 12th straight year.

"There is a sense of urgency by everybody in this organization. Coaches, fans, players, parents, I mean everybody that is a Wildcat fan," senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said.

"This is our last chance to turn our season around, so it's all or nothing for us."

program anymore."

One of the most intriguing details about the match-up is Nebraska's new West Coast offense and how the Wildcats respond to it after years of seeing the Huskers run the option.

Coach Bill Snyder said watching Nebraska on film this year has been a different experience.

"It's different, and it's unique," Snyder said. "You take each year as it comes and each game as it comes. I've seen them now for 15 years, and it is a different feel."

With Nebraska sitting tied atop the Big 12 North standings and K-State at 0-3 in conference, the game becomes important for different reasons for each team.

A win for Nebraska would give the Huskers the inside track to the Big 12 Championship game. A win for K-State could potentially reroute the season and help the Wildcats finish strong with a Big 12 North title still in reach.

the Cornhuskers have thrown for at least 180 yards or more in their past three games.

"As each game has went on, they are getting more comfortable with it," senior defensive tackle Jermaine Berry said.

Dailey is completing 52.9 percent of his passes, is averaging 212.3 yards per game and has a pass efficiency rating of 128.03.

"I think he's improving, and they have brought the offense to him, and he is responding well," Snyder said.

"I think maybe they have progressed to a point where they have identified those things that they are most comfortable with and those things they are perhaps still in the growing stage. They have maybe defined their package, so to speak, a little more clearly."

Even though Nebraska's offense has not emphasized the run as much in 2004, defensive coordinator Bob Elliott said the Cornhuskers are still dangerous on the ground.

"It's different, but they still run the ball very well, and they will still punch you in the mouth," Elliott said. "They are going to give us the run game until we stop it."

Nebraska ranks fifth in the Big 12 in rushing yardage, gaining 194.5 yards per game with junior running back Cory Ross leading the way with 590 yards and three touchdowns.

"They are running the ball pretty well, and they are picking their spots throwing," Elliott said. "They are still very

Police arrest suspect in rape case

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A homeless Junction City man was arrested for rape Thursday.

Emory Walker, 24, was arrested in connection with the rape of a 14-year-old acquaintance in early 2004, Riley County Police Lt. Kurt Moldrup said.

The crime was reported to RCPD March 9.

Moldrup said the girl allegedly entered the residence with the suspect willingly, but after spending time together, he allegedly raped her.

Following the report, Moldrup said a warrant was issued for Walker's arrest, but because he is homeless, it was difficult to locate him.

At the time the incident was reported, Moldrup said the victim did not require medical attention.

Walker is being detained by the RCPD on a $20,000 bond.

No plans for increased lighting in City Park

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Night joggers at City Park won't be able to enjoy more lighting for the sidewalks any time soon.

Brad Everett, Manhattan mayor, said City Commissioners haven't had any discussion about the lights in City Park.

Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department said it is important to weigh the cost versus the need for lights.

"We don't have a large amount of crime in City Park, but lighting up the whole park would help," he said. "People are less likely to commit crimes in an area that is well lit."

Moldrup said he doesn't think the park is designed to be used in the dark.

However, since the park's curfew is 11 p.m. After Daylight Savings Time ends, that leaves about five hours after dark that community members are allowed to enjoy the park.

Danielle Garrison, junior in interior architecture, said she stopped going to the park at night, because she doesn't feel safe.

"It's since the whole rape stuff," she said. "I also get creeped out by the homeless people who are there at night."

Will Yankey, junior in interior architecture, said he jogs at the park whenever he can, whether it's night or day.

"I feel safe jogging at night," he said.

City Commissioner Mark Hatesohl said he would be open to try and improve the situation

Wildcat running game, Nebraska turnovers lead to rout over Huskers

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's three-consecutive conference losses, the questions surrounding the quarterback position, Nebraska's West Coast offense — there were many reasons to doubt whether the Wildcats could pull off a win Saturday afternoon over the Cornhuskers.

But led by a revitalized running attack and a stingy second-half defense, K-State (3-4, 1-3) pulled off a convincing 45-21 win over the Cornhuskers (4-3, 2-2) in front of the fifth-largest crowd in school history (52,234) at KSU Stadium.

The third-consecutive win against Nebraska marked the first time in the series' history the Wildcats had won three consecutive over their rivals to the north.

"It feels good knowing we beat them twice at our house and beat them once in their house," said sophomore safety Maurice Mack, who had a second-half fumble recovery. "Hopefully, we can keep this thing coming for years and years to come."

In place of injured starting quarterback Dylan Meier, sophomore Allen Webb ripped apart the Blackshirt defense with his legs, while also showing efficiency through the air.

Webb was 14-of-23 passing for 124 yards, but the story was his role in the Wildcat running game. The transfer from Indiana, who had struggled in previous appearances this season, ran for 147 yards and four touchdowns on 34 carries.

Coach Bill Snyder said Webb put in the necessary effort during the week's practice to succeed Saturday.

"I think what really was most important was that he took the time (to prepare)," Snyder said. "He spent more time in preparation than he has, and that's what quarterbacks have to do. Great quarterbacks do exactly that."

Not to be outdone was senior running back Darren Sproles, showing why he was considered a Heisman Trophy candidate prior to the season by running for 135 yards and two touchdowns at 6.1 yards per carry.

Running back Darren Sproles breaks a Nebraska tackle during the first half of Saturday's game at KSU Stadium. Sproles ran for 135 yards on 22 carries, helping the Wildcats break their three-game losing streak with a 45-21 win over the Cornhuskers.

Sproles rewrote two records on the afternoon. The 5-foot-7, 180-pound running back broke a tie with former teammate, quarterback Eli Roberson, for sole possession of the K-State career touchdown record with his first touchdown run — a one-yard run — at the 12:12 mark in the second quarter.

Sproles also surpassed former Texas running back Ricky Williams for the Big 12 Conference career all-purpose yards record. Sproles now has 6,010 career all-purpose yards to Williams' 5,992.

Webb, who found out Thursday he was starting, said having Sproles in the backfield provided an extra level of comfort for himself.

"It always makes me feel good when I'm playing with a back like Darren, because he's an amazing guy who can do amazing things," Webb said.

As good as the offense was in scoring its most points of the season, the Wildcat defense played a critical part in that success.

After giving up big pass plays of 63 and 55 yards from Nebraska quarterback Joe Dailey that led to two touchdowns in the first half, K-State tightened up in half number two.

Led by the strong play from the front-seven, the Wildcats forced three consecutive turnovers — two Dailey fumbles and an interception — in the fourth quarter, leading to two K-State touchdowns and the final 24-point winning margin.

Mack said it was the defense's aggressive nature that made the difference in the game.

"We took it to them instead of them taking it to us," Mack said. "That's the big thing right there, we took it to them."

With the win, K-State finds itself in the thick of things in a jumbled up Big 12 North Division race. The Wildcats are among four teams with 1-3 conference records, just one game behind Missouri and Nebraska at 2-2.

The next challenge awaiting K-State is next Saturday's 6 p.m. clash with Texas Tech at KSU Stadium.

Junior offensive tackle Jerome Clary said, though the Nebraska win is great, there is still a long road ahead for the Wildcats.

"We've got to win out, so we have a chance to play in the Big 12 Championship," Clary said.

Foundation offers scholarship for campus groups

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student organizations seeking extra money to fund a campus or community project might not have to fund-raise or ask Student Governing Association for additional funds, thanks to a scholarship offered by the K-State Student Foundation.

The Student Foundation group is accepting applications for the Student Foundation Organizational Scholarship, a $400 award given to one student group on campus in November.

The group must be registered through the Office of Student Activities and Services and must use the money to fund a program that will benefit either the K-State or Manhattan community by May 2005.

Applications are available online at www.found.ksu.edu/studentfoundation and are due by Nov. 1 at the OSAS office in the K-State Student Union.

The scholarship was developed after the Student Foundation group came up with additional funds.

"From a historical standpoint, the Student Foundation has had a fund here where we put our dues and any other money we earn," said Diane Hinrichs, adviser to the Student Foundation and director of donor relations. "That fund has grown large enough that we have the ability to endow it. Since we reached that limit, the question became, what do we want to do with the money?"

As a result, Student Foundation members decided to create a scholarship that would in turn help out other students.

Tami Felts, chairperson for the scholarship committee and fifth-year senior in architectural engineering, said they wanted to find student groups who were doing projects to help out the K-State and Manhattan communities.

"This way we thought we were affecting a lot more people," Felts said. "With SGA, it's sometimes hard to get funds, especially with smaller foundation.

When: Applications are due by 4 p.m. Nov. 1 in the Student Foundation mailbox in the OSAS office, located in the K-State Student Union.

■ Campus groups interested in applying must use the money to benefit the Manhattan or campus community and complete the project by May 2005.

HEADLINES

The Associated Press

Soldier deaths

The bodies of 50 unarmed Iraqi soldiers were found in rural Iraq on Sunday. Most has been killed execution style with gunshots to the back of the head.

Earthquakes

Tens of thousands of Japanese took shelter Sunday after a series of earthquakes killed at least 19 people and injured as many as 1,800. The largest earthquake was measured at 6.8 magnitude.

Afghan vote

Afghanistan's interim leader Hamid Karzai won a majority of votes cast in the landmark presidential elections, according to results released Sunday. Karzai, however, has not been declared the winner.

Border battle

The University of Missouri and the University of Kansas have decided to drop the title "Border War" that coins their athletic rivalry and rename it "Border Showdown." Officials said the word "war" was inappropriate after the Sept. 11 attacks.

DON'T FORGET

■ Enrollment for the spring semester starts today for students with 116 hours or more. Go to courses.k-state.edu for a course listing.

■ A sidewalk chalking competition for Homecoming will be from 2 to 4 p.m. today in the Bosco Student Plaza. The event is open to any campus organization.

IN RETROSPECT
WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Red Sox, Cardinals in World Series

Boston Red Sox batter Manny Ramirez hits an RBI single Saturday in the seventh inning of game one of the World Series at Fenway Park in Boston.

Staff and wire reports
The Boston Red Sox took a 1-0 lead in the World Series against the St. Louis Cardinals after upending the New York Yankees in Game 7 of the American League Championship Series. The Red Sox have not won a World Series since 1918, when they sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees — a deal that supposedly cursed Boston.
The Cardinals also won a dramatic Game 7 in the National League Championship Series against the Houston Astros to advance to the World Series.

PRESIDENTIAL POLLS
President Bush and challenger Sen. John Kerry remained in a statistical tie in national polls throughout the week.
Various polls showed slight changes in support, but none were significant enough to separate the candidates.

IN THE MONEY
The state of Kansas reached an agreement with two Indian tribes to allow a casino in Kansas City, Kan., near the Kansas Speedway.
The revenue-sharing deal could earn the state as much as $50 million per year. The Kickapoo and Sac and Fox tribes will build and operate the casino.

VACCINE SHORTAGES
Health officials continued to battle a shortage the flu vaccine, but relief is in sight. Another 2.6 million vaccines will be available in January, officials said.
President Bush and Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry played politics with the shortage, with Kerry blaming Bush's policies for the shortage and Bush promising to provide more.

Crime report e-mails sent to K-State account holders

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All students, faculty and staff of K-State received the 2003 Annual Security Report and Crime Statistics via e-mail. It reported that the violence is stagnant, if not slightly decreased on campus.

The report, compiled by the Office of Student Life, was released Oct. 1 in conjunction with the Cleary Act, a federal regulation that requires the reporting of certain crimes, including certain sex offenses, burglary and alcohol and drug-related crimes.

Scott Jones, assistant dean of student life, helped compile the report.

"The report does not necessarily include all crimes," Jones said.

"For example, opportunity theft, such as if you left your backpack out and it was stolen, is not included. However, the report does provide an accurate snapshot of the university's crime levels."

In addition to the actual crime statistics, the report includes university policies on sexual violence, drugs and alcohol. Safety resource information also is included, such as contact information for the K-State and Riley County Police Departments and how to report crimes.

Some students said they took the time to look at the report.

Ashley Urban, junior in architectural engineering, said this was the first year she has looked at the report.

"I have heard of a couple rapes in Manhattan recently," Urban said.

"I have classes which require me to be on campus late, so I was interested in the statistics."

Captain Troy Lane of the K-State Police Department said the report is not only useful to current students and faculty, but prospective attendees as well.

"The statistics are released because by law they have to be," Lane said. "But they can be helpful to prospective students who are deciding where to go to school. They can get a feel for the campus' safety."

As for the 2003 statistics, there are no significant fluctuations from recent years, Jones said.

"K-State continues to be a safe university," Jones said. "There are educational activities on campus, which teach students how to protect themselves from crimes, and there is also excellent K-State and Riley County police departments that patrol the area 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

Comparison of K-State's Manhattan campus to the Salina campus is difficult, Jones said.

"Based on size, Salina will naturally have fewer crimes reported," Jones said, "but both campuses are relatively safe."

To make K-State as safe as possible, students should use common sense and take simple precautions, Lane said.

"Students should walk in lit areas and in groups," Lane said. "And students shouldn't be afraid to use available resources, such as campus escorts."

Urban said she has taken some precautions in recent months.

"I bought some pepper spray for when I have to walk on campus late at night," Urban said. "I always try to have someone pick me up if I can."

When:

7 tonight

Where:

Forum Hall, K-State Student Union

Topic:

Challenges to Empire: Iraq, the U.N. and the "Second Super Power"

What to expect:

Bennis plans to share her research and experience concerning a project that analyzes the drive toward a U.S. empire in the Middle East Region and beyond. In addition, her speech will analyze the Bush administration's reaction to the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

Why you should go:

In 2001, Bennis co-founded the U.S. Campaign to End Israeli Occupation. She works closely with the United for Peace and Justice anti-war coalition and has played an active role in the emergent global peace movement since 2002.

TO THE POINT City should add lighting to City Park for safety

City commissioners should consider the positive aspects of lighting up City Park.

Even though the main negative point to additional lights at City Park is the money it takes to purchase and maintain the lights, that money would go to making a safe and usable park at night.

Lighting up City Park at night can benefit the entire community by providing a well-lit, night-time park atmosphere.

Besides the obvious benefits of having a safer park for night walkers, joggers and passers-by, the lights would allow the park to still be usable at night for people of all ages.

Having access at night makes sense, because despite past crime statistics, it would be a safer space in the future due to the fact that less crime occurs in well-lit areas.

Along with Daylight Savings Time ending next weekend, and with the park curfew being 11 p.m., that leaves five to six hours of a dark park in which the community pays to help maintain. That means that for approximately one-third of the day the park would be basically useless and would aid any criminal endeavors.

Lights would offer full access to community members during the park's hours, which means the community gets more for its money.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The number of Americans who are disenchanted with politics is quite heinous.

The projections are that 100 million people are going to thumb their noses at the the voting booth, and many people I talk to are voting for Candidate A because, well, he's better than Candidate B.

JONAS HOGG

The sad thing is that Candidates C-Z aren't even being given a second thought.

If ever there seemed a time ripe to stick a third party wrench in the two party gears of the system it would be now.

If you find that neither the asses nor the elephants are representing you the way that you would like, then a quick Internet search will give you a much longer list of parties to choose from.

From racist to pacifists, libertarians to communist, there are more than 50 parties to choose from.

Or if you are feeling like a mix try the Libertarian National Socialist Green Party.

Libertarian eco-wacko Nazis? Color me curious, if extremely, violently repulsed.

But why don't these get any press? CNN is just too busy, doing what god only knows.

Nevertheless, the third parties persist in their thankless job of rocking the boat, if only ever so slightly. In fact, if it weren't for a certain candidate who shall remain Ralph Nader, it is very possible that we might be looking at four more with Gore right now.

Or should we drift through the annals of time to 1992 when Ross Perot, running on the independent ticket, took almost 25 percent of the total votes, it is possible to see that not only can the third party people run, but they can contend.

They can contend in a big way, and could contend in a bigger way if only we could find a way to convince the 100 million who are too lazy, dumb, or self-professed cool to get to the polls.

After all, once a party gets 6 percent of the total vote they get to hop on the campaign finance bandwagon, thus making them an even bigger contender in the next campaign.

But, if there is so much dissatisfaction with Tweedledumb and Tweedlephoney (to borrow William Lind's term), why aren't more people getting fired up about someone else, anyone else rather than the big two?

Because, A: somewhere along the way we picked up a notion that third party votes simply don't count. That any vote that wasn't for the ass or the elephant must be for some wacko fringe somewhere and should promptly be discounted.

And, B: because we have to beat the other guy. I've been told on several occasions when discussing third parties that unless I vote specifically for party A, then I'm supporting party B, even if I'm not voting for them.

This intellectually bankrupt bit of reasoning of "you're either with us or you're with the other guys" is a little too much of a Bushian phrase for me. But I've heard it from both parties, both of whom seem to care less about winning and more about beating the other guy.

But, as an idealist I will continue to dream.

There are so many colors in the spectrum it seems a damn shame to limit our country to red and blue.

So bear in mind that there are more options than Tweedledumb and Tweedlephoney on the ballot. Perhaps we won't have a Libertarian or Green presidency this year, but if we can rock the boat a little bit and keep it rocking for a few more years there is no telling what could happen.

If you want my opinion (which you must), they can take that elephant and stick it up their ass.

College offers chance to hit the road

The purpose of higher education is to achieve academic success and get a foot wedged in the door of the real world. Nothing could be more important in college.

Except taking sweet road trips.

When I came to college, I decided I was going to make the most of it. I vowed that, in my 11 years here, I would spend more time on road trips than Jay Leno spends at the Not Funny store.

And I have. Since my freshman year, I've trekked to Georgia, Boston, San Diego, Colorado, Arizona twice, Wisconsin thrice and Texas quadrice (I made up that word).

I hate to come off as Bartholomew Braggadocio, but I've definitely been on more road trips than you, so you will now sit there and obediently read my sage advice on how to turn your next road trip from sweet to super-sweet.

1) First things first: Abandon any and all common sense.

You might not have money, a vehicle or a place to stay, but those are only minor details that can be worked out later.

On my most recent trip, we did not have a place to stay. All the hotels were booked, but that whole "hotel" thing is overrated anyway, so we slept in our van for three days and nights (a la Cody from "Step By Step").

We used dirty clothes and garbage bags as blankets and snuck into the dorms to shower. Hobo life was not as bad as everyone makes it seem.

2) Hot road tunes are a must.

I know it may seem thrilling at first, but the book-on-tape version of "The Bridges of Madison County" is going to get old sooner or later.

That's why I recommend burning a compilation disc of music by schizophrenic Chicago poet/singer Wesley Willis.

With smooth Casio grooves and such lyrical ingenuity as, "rock and roll is the joyride music / whip that snow leopard's ass," Wesley is sure to keep you and your road cronies beboppin' and scattin' until the wee hours of the early morn.

3) If you're unfortunate enough to be going on a road trip with your family, be sure to pack the sleeping pills.

4) Pack the right food. Sandwiches and other legitimate items of sustenance are for squares. You're not a square, are you? Hell no, you're not.

That's why you need to bring all the turkey jerky, squeeze cheese and Star Crunches you can possibly get your mitts on. Four days of this will inevitably lead to intestinal ground zero, but it's better than being a square.

5) Bring a good book with you. You'll be cooped up in that car for hours, so you may as well sharpen those mental muscles.

Just kidding! Reading is for suckers and smart people. Bring a GameBoy instead.

6) Don't forget a disposable camera. You're guaranteed to meet a lot of weirdos along the way, especially if you're going anywhere in Texas.

You'll need that film to document people like the weird lady on the street who offered us a bathtub full of whiskey in exchange for a quarter.

Plus, if you're Mr. Fancy-Pants and you actually do cough up the dinero to stay in a hotel, you and your friends can sneak into the weight room at three in the morning and stage photos of yourselves chugging 40s on the exercise bike.

These are the memories you'll share with your grandkids.

7) People in other states don't know you, so feel free to make up outrageous claims to impress them. If you're hitting on a girl in a bar, telling her that you were an extra in "Junior" guarantees that you'll be back at her place within an hour. Party time, excellent.

Unfortunately for you, I'm out of advice. So go forth and start ramblin', you ramblin' man.

Jeremy is a senior in music composition. Please send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

Volleyball team falls to Texas for 2nd time

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was the same song, second verse for the women's volleyball team as it came up short against Texas for the second time this season, falling 3-0 Saturday in Austin, Texas.

The loss dropped the No. 18

Wildcats to 13-7 overall and 7-4 in the Big 12 Conference. The No. 10 Longhorns improved to 17-2 overall and 9-2 in conference play.

Senior outside hitter Valerie Hejjas had a big day for K-State, with 17 kills on .405 hitting. Senior middle blocker Lisa Martin had six kills on .375 hitting and freshman libero Angie Lastra added 14 digs.

Texas outside hitter Mira Topic led all players with 19 kills as the Longhorns' front-line gave K-State problems again, holding the Wildcats to .193 hitting while Texas hit .333.

The teams went back and forth in game one before Texas pulled ahead 23-19 and held on for the 30-27 win. In game two, the Longhorns went on a 13-3 run to lead 16-6 and held off a K-State charge for the 30-25 win. The Wildcats led as late as 17-16 in game three before Texas finished strong to take the game 30-23 and the match.

After failing in its revenge attempt, K-State has all week to prepare for a team seeking revenge itself, Kansas, at 1:30 p.m. next Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats defeated Kansas in five games earlier this season in Lawrence.

WTEN | Wildcats make run at singles, doubles titles

Members of the K-State tennis team excelled in both singles and doubles play this past weekend at the Wilson/ITA Regional Championships in Tulsa, Okla.

Senior Maria Rosenberg continued her move up the K-State all-time career singles wins list, advancing all the way to the quarterfinals. In the quarterfinals, Rosenberg fell to No. 1 seed Daniela Muscolino of Tulsa, 6-2, 6-0. The senior now has sole possession of third-place on the all-time wins list and is just three wins out of second place.

In other action, freshman Tamar Kvaratskhelia extended her season record to 11-0, advancing to the round of 16 before losing to No. 2 seed Maja Kovacek of New Mexico, 7-5, 3-6, 6-0.

Kvaratskhelia's winning streak to begin the season was the longest since Rosenberg's six-game streak to start her career in 2001.

As a No. 10-seeded doubles tandem, Kvaratskhelia and Rosenberg upset Colorado's No. 4 seeded duo of Kendra Strandemo and Jessica Vanderys, 8-3, before losing in the semifinals, 8-5, to BYU's Dolly Change and Lauren Jones.

Webb has career day against Huskers, leads Cats to 45-21 victory

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a simple fist in the air as he trotted off the field and a congratulatory hug from K-State President Jon Wefald as he entered the locker room, sophomore quarterback Allen Webb capped a breakthrough performance in a 45-21 win over Nebraska Saturday.

It was a scene few expected when Webb was announced as the Wildcats' (3-4, 1-3) starting quarterback prior to kickoff at KSU Stadium.

In his previous two starts, the transfer from Indiana was just 8-of-22 passing for 87 yards with two interceptions. But against the Cornhuskers (4-3, 2-2), Webb accounted for 271 yards of total offense and four touchdowns.

"It's fun to see Allen Webb have his moment in time, because you go back early in the season and a lot of people were down on him and a lot of people doubted his abilities. What he did today showed you what kind of athlete he is, and we couldn't be prouder of him," co-offensive coordinator Greg Peterson said.

The 6-foot-3, 205-pound, Denver, Colo., native did most of his damage on the ground, carving up the nation's second-best rushing defense with 147 yards on 34 carries and four touchdowns. Webb also was effective in the passing game, completing 14-of-23 for 124 yards and no interceptions.

Webb said his time spent watching game film in preparation for the game paid off.

"Earlier in the previous ball games it was a little frustrating, but this week I just got in and watched hours and hours of film, and that made a big difference for me," Webb said. "I'm just glad I got the job done today."

Webb started the game on fire, leading K-State to touchdowns in three of its first four drives.

"We knew we had to put them away, because Nebraska is a great team and they played us hard, so every drive we were just trying to come up with a touchdown," Webb said.

Webb's 147 yards rushing was the most rushing yards for a K-State quarterback since former Wildcat Eli Roberson rushed for 178 yards against Colorado in 2002. His fourth touchdown in the fourth quarter made him the 10th Wildcat to score four touchdowns in a single game.

Sophomore wide receiver Yamon Figurs said he thought Webb improved throughout the week of practice.

"On Monday he practiced really good, and as the week went on he kept getting better and better, so we knew he was going to get the job done," Figurs said.

Despite a fumble into the endzone and an interception that was overturned by a roughing-the-passer penalty, Coach Bill Snyder said he was proud of his young quarterback.

"It's the Allen Webb we anticipated and thought could do many of the things that he did today," Snyder said.

Webb ignores doubters, puts offense on his shoulders to win

Even though I was somewhat removed from the field of play in the press box, I could sense it. Everybody sensed it.

When Allen Webb, not Dylan Meier, took the field as the Wildcat starting quarterback prior to K-State's first offensive possession, you could feel the fans groan.

Later, several of my friends confirmed that reaction, and you just knew almost everybody in the stadium thought K-State's chances of defeating Nebraska for the third consecutive year just took a big hit.

We were all wrong. Webb destroyed the Blackshirts Saturday, leading the Cats to a 45-21 whooping of the Huskers.

Teaming up with senior running back Darren Sproles, the sophomore transfer from Indiana ran all over Nebraska, as the Wildcats went for 294 total yards on the ground.

This was a different man on that field.

This was not the same guy who looked dismal when he started in place of Meier in losses to Fresno State and Kansas. This was not the same player who had rushed for just 26 yards on 32 carries in five appearances this season. Or the guy who was just 11-of-28 passing with two interceptions heading into the Nebraska game.

This was a confident, explosive individual who had no problem leading a football team when it needed him the most.

K-State had to win Saturday. A loss would have all but wiped out a chance at repeating as Big 12 North Division champs and would have put the Wildcats one step closer to missing a bowl game for the first time since 1992.

The game was in Webb's hands.

I don't have to remind Wildcat fans about how — prior to Saturday — Webb looked absolutely lost running the team. He looked like he didn't understand the playbook, he couldn't recognize wide-open receivers, he ran the option poorly and, well, he just didn't do anything very good.

So what does Webb do against the Cornhuskers?

First possession: leads a 75-yard touchdown drive, runs for a touchdown.

Second possession: leads a 49-yard touchdown drive, runs for a touchdown.

And it was on.

Though he still had his moments where his passing left much to be desired, Webb excelled throughout the game, becoming only the 10th Wildcat ever to run for four touchdowns in a single game. His 147 rushing yards were the most by a K-State quarterback since Eli Roberson ran for 178 yards against Colorado in 2002.

As we witnessed Webb take over the game, many of us were left wondering how he was able to make such a dramatic turnaround.

The answer: work ethic.

After the game, Coach Bill Snyder, assistant coaches and players sang the praises of Webb and how he prepared himself for Saturday.

Snyder said he knew at the beginning of the week Webb would likely start over Meier.

And the preparation began. Webb busted his tail studying film, working with co-offensive coordinator Del Miller and doing all that was necessary for him to lead the Cats to victory.

It speaks volumes about the man that he was able to push aside the doubters, which included some on the team, and do all in his power to make sure if the Wildcats went down to the Huskers, it wouldn't be because he played poorly.

Dylan Meier is still the starting quarterback. Snyder made this absolutely clear Saturday. But if Meier is still dinged up this Saturday for another Wildcat must-win game against Texas Tech at KSU Stadium, I bet there will be a different feel if Webb is announced as starter.

Instead of expecting the offense to sputter, fans will expect the offense to flourish. Instead of groans, Webb will hear cheers.

MGLF | Wildcats finish 7th at the Nelson Invitational

In its final event of the fall season, the K-State men's golf team dropped in the final round, taking seventh out of 16 teams in the three-day the Nelson Invitational this weekend in Palo Alto, Calif., at the Stanford Golf Club.

The Wildcats combined for 292-271-286 (849) on the par-69 course.

K-State Individual scores:

-Senior Matt Van Cleave tied for 9th 68-70-72 (210)
-Junior Ben Kern tied for 12th 75-63-73 (211)
-Senior Jonathan James tied for 31st 75-72-68 (215)
-Junior Tyler Cummins tied for 50th 75-70-73 (218)
-Senior Nick Schumacher tied for 63rd 74-68-80 (222)

EQUES | K-State tops competition in Chicago

The K-State equestrian team found team and individual success this past weekend at the Northern Illinois Hunt Show in Chicago.

On Saturday, senior Allison Woodworth won High Point Rider honors after first-place finishes in Open Over Fences B and Open Flat A. Woodworth's performance helped the Wildcats capture High Point Team honors for the day with 37 points, seven more points than second-place Northern Illinois.

Day two was just as good for the Wildcats. Senior Dehila Burdan took home Reserve High Point Rider honors, as K-State once again was the High Point Team with 36 points to second-place Northern Illinois' 33.

The Wildcats' next action is Nov. 13 and 14, as they host the K-State Hunt Show at Fox Creek Stables.

South Park creators bring humor to latest film

"Team America: World Police"

★★★★☆

Movie review by J. Scott Bowman

Trey Parker and Matt Stone always seem to make everything innocent seem so wrong ... and hilarious.

In their latest venture, the creators of South Park use puppets to tell the story of "Team America: World Police."

Members of Team America, a police force devoted to fighting evil around the world, recruit a rising Broadway actor, Gary Johnston (voiced by Parker) to thwart plans of dictator Kim Jong Il's (Parker) plot to end the world — "think 9/11 times 1,000."

The Team always kills the bad guy, at the cost of dozens of innocent by-standers and several priceless monuments, including the Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, the Sphinx and the pyramids at Giza.

Just like in the "South Park" shows and movie, Parker and Stone cross the lines of several cultural, racial and sexual taboos.

Part of what makes it work is that the puppets, like the foul-mouthed cartoon characters in "South Park," are an art form that generally seems so innocent — it seems so wrong to see puppets engaged in a variety of sexual positions, but it feels so natural to laugh.

Granted, at face value, most of the humor in the movie is childish, but believe it or not, beyond the raunchy humor, there is some political and cultural weight to the jokes they make — from the fake Film Actor's Guild striving for peace by joining Il's "Peace Conference," to the team destroying everything just to get a handful of terrorists, to a puppet Michael Moore protesting the team's actions.

Parker and Stone's best comedic asset is how they can make fun of things, including pop icons, themselves and their creations.

In "Team America" they poke fun of "Top Gun," "Rocky" and any generic action movie.

The acting stinks. And, all joking aside, Parker and Stone probably would agree and find it funny since they are smart enough to know the puppets they use for the movie have limitations.

However, they play off of that brilliantly with some of the puppets' gestures and facial expressions.

The story-line is generic, just like the characters, and that is what makes the movie so funny. From a training scene with a montage, and the song "Montage," in which the song explains what a training montage should be.

And that is another one of the movie's greatest comedic strength is the music. Like "Orgazmo" (1998) and "South Park," the music is just as funny as the jokes, and just as catchy.

If you appreciate "South Park," you will most likely love this movie. "Team America: World Police" is a comedy that will leave you rolling in the aisle if you watch it with an open mind, expecting Parker and Stone to be pushing some buttons.

After all, who other than the guys who created "Passion of the Jew" from "South Park" could make Hans Blix getting eaten by sharks seem so funny?

Up-and-coming Denver-based band brings stylings to Manhattan

Plastic Parachute, an emerging band on the national scene from Denver, played at PJ's Bar and Grill on Friday night along with Tripwire and Semidivine.

Plastic Parachute, consisting of vocalist Deb Hooks, guitarist Ricky Brewer, bassist Shaun Nelson, and drummer Nic Woods, formerly of Pomeroy, is on a tour of the Midwest promoting their new four-song CD "Risk of Injury."

Before forming PP, Hooks and Brewer performed as an acoustic duo in Nashville, Tenn., and the formation of the band just kind of happened, Hooks said.

"We've all been musicians in other bands and just kind of met through other people," she said.

Their music is influenced by a mix of artists including Fiona Apple, Incubus, Nirvana, Jurassic Five, the Films, and Alice in Videoland, and is described by Brewer as "straight forward, female fronted rock."

Their current tour is a logical move following their decision to go to L.A. to record, Brewer said, and it includes stops in Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Colorado before heading back for a west coast tour.

"We went to Los Angeles to record our latest EP and decided that we needed to tour the middle of the country," he said.

Not only does playing in Plastic Parachute provide the members with income, it also is the ideal job.

"I like the freedom of being able to do what I love," Brewer said.

"The only drawbacks are that you don't always get daily showers, and we have to front the cost for travel," Hooks said.

Nelson said he enjoys it because of the freedom.

"I wouldn't say there really is anything bad about it (touring), because we get to do what we want and don't have anyone telling us what to do," Nelson said.

The band has had some critics, because they have a female vocalist, but it hasn't hurt them at all, Hooks said.

"In some ways, people think you won't rock as hard, like 'what is this, a chick singer?'," she said. "But we do get some breaks."

The band also was well received by the audience. Barry Harris, doorman at PJ's, said he typically enjoys metal bands.

"The opinion of a Manhattan metal-head is, they were much better than I thought, and they're very good at what they do."

Paul Edwards, sophomore in music education, said he was captivated more by the visual appeal of the band.

"The lead singer looks like Tank Girl, and I like Tank Girl.

They rock," he said.

Nick Causing, Manhattan resident, said he also really liked Hooks.

"I thought they kicked ass, but I'm afraid my opinion is tainted because I found the singer strongly attractive in a 'I want to feed you' kind of way."

Catherine Zeta-Jones
sues topless club

Actress Catherine Zeta-Jones has sued a Nevada topless club she said used her image for advertising and promotion without her permission. The lawsuit filed Thursday in U.S. District Court in Los Angeles said the Spice House, which bills itself as "Reno's friendliest topless cabaret," displayed her picture on "numerous pages" of its Web site, sometimes alongside partially nude women.

Zeta-Jones

That created the false impression the actress "endorsed or approved of the sexually explicit content" and could "dilute the value of her celebrity endorsement," the lawsuit says.

The star of "Chicago" has never authorized the club or its owner, Wesglow Resources, to display her image, according to the lawsuit. She seeks unspecified damages and an order barring further use of her likeness.

Woman sues Sizemore for sexual harassment

A woman has filed a lawsuit accusing actor Tom Sizemore of sexual harassment while he starred in the now-canceled CBS show "Robbery Homicide Division."

Loretta Jody Miller claims Sizemore repeatedly made lewd statements, groped her and exposed himself. She also alleged that she was wrongly fired after she complained.

Miller's position or relation to Sizemore were unclear.

Sizemore, 42, who has appeared in such films as "Black Hawk Down" and "Saving Private Ryan," was sentenced in October to six months in jail on misdemeanor charges of physically abusing Hollywood madam Heidi Fleiss during their two-year relationship.

His parole was revoked last month after he failed to complete a drug test.

Simpson's vocal aid exposed on 'SNL'

Singer Ashlee Simpson's "extra help" may have been exposed when a "Saturday Night Live" audience heard her voice — singing the wrong song — while she held a microphone at her waist.

Her record company blamed a computer glitch and she blamed her band for Sunday morning's incident, which cut off her planned performance of the song "Autobiography" on the network comedy show.

Simpson had performed her hit single "Pieces of Me" without incident earlier in the show. When she came back a second time, her band started playing and the first lines of her singing "Pieces of Me" could be heard again.

She looked momentarily confused as the band plowed ahead with the song and the vocal was quickly silenced.

Simpson made some exaggerated hopping dance moves, then walked off the stage 35 seconds into the performance. NBC quickly cut to a commercial.

Her record company, Geffen Records, said there was a computer glitch. Instead of some pretaped electronic percussion, the recording of "Pieces of Me" started mistakenly performing, the record company said in a statement.

Kravitz sued for $300K

An insurance company has sued Lenny Kravitz, saying it had to pay more than $300,000 worth of water damage in a neighbor's apartment after one of Kravitz's toilets overflowed two months ago.

Amica Mutual Insurance Co. says in court papers that the apartment of retired executive Joel M. Disend "sustained catastrophic water damage" on Aug. 1 due to Kravitz's "allowing a commode to become blocked, clogged and congested with various materials."

"Until we decide what to do to improve City Park overall, we may try to solve that problem too," he said. "There's a lot of work that needs to be done in City Park."

Everett said some of the older neighborhoods get darker at night, as well, including Vattier Street and Bertrand Street.

"People need to be aware of their surroundings and try to avoid precarious situations if possible," he said.

Moldrup said he agreed.

"We're not trying to take the place of any other funding opportunities from SGA," Hinrichs said. "We're sure that some student organization is doing a project that needs a little bit more funding."

Chris Bird, sophomore in business, uses a crow bar to break off a piece of wood for the structure of a homecoming float. Bird and other members of Lambda Chi Alpha and their homecoming partner Gamma Phi Beta plan to have their float ready for the parade on Friday.

Nate McCormick, sophomore in mechanical engineering, measures chicken wire on the float Sunday afternoon at Lambda Chi Alpha. The float is a work in progress and won't be finished until later this week.

All-University Homecoming returns with new block party activities

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Homecoming week is calling for all K-Staters to be "wild with pride."

Andrea Bryant, All-University Homecoming Chair, said homecoming started yesterday with the 5K race and all proceeds went to Sunset Zoological Park. She said this was appropriate to the "wild with pride" theme.

"Pretty much the entire week revolves around the theme," Bryant said.

"Pretty much everything they do throughout is supposed to incorporate the 'wild with pride' theme."

Bryant said the competitions are open to Greek chapters, residence halls and organizations, but every other event is open to everyone.

For more information

Information about homecoming can be found at the K-State Alumni Association's Web site at www.k-state.com.

Building up to homecoming is a yearlong process, she said.

"We start planning for homecoming a year in advance," Bryant said.

"Things get more intense in the spring. That's when we select the homecoming committee."

The student events end with the parade, pep rally and block party, she said. Moro Street in Aggieville will be blocked off for the pep rally and block party.

This will be the first year for the block party, which will feature games, discounts and activities throughout Aggieville, Bryant said.

The block party and pep rally will follow the parade and will take place at about 7:15 p.m.

Aaron Leiker, senior in electronic journalism and student homecoming committee member, said the block party is expected to be a big event.

"It's something we are very excited about," he said.

Leiker said he was on the committee last year, also, and there are some upgrades in the week from last year to this year.

The block party is the only new event, but there are some events coming back that weren't part of homecoming last year, Leiker said.

"One difference from last year is we brought back Pant the Chant," he said.

Leiker said they had heard mixed responses last year on whether or not to bring pant the chant back, but most people wanted it back.

"It's something that people really enjoy," he said.

Pant the Chant will be at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Whether or not Pant the Chant stays part of homecoming week is uncertain, he said.

"If it goes well, we'll continue to see it in years to come," Leiker said.

He said homecoming week is fun and students should go to the events.

"We have a great time," Leiker said.

"It let's people get a glimpse of how much students love K-State."

Leiker is particularly excited about this year, he said.

"This is going to be a block-buster year. I'm expecting a blow-out week," Leiker said. "It sounds like it's going to be a great turnout."

Groups practice for spirit event

By Patrice R. Holderbach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stars freckled the cloudless sky above Memorial Stadium, where vocal commands could be heard throughout the otherwise still night air on Sunday.

Stand up on time. Yell together. Try not to make it look so "thrusty."

About 60 members of Delta Chi, Delta Upsilon and Kappa

Gamma had gathered to rehearse their Pant the Chant skit. It was the third in a series of five voluntary practices lasting for more than an hour each time.

"It's crazy. We put an hour and a half a night into a skit that's about a minute and 30 seconds long," said Ryan Foster, a junior in secondary education who was appointed as Pant the Chant chairperson for Delta Chi.

Foster stepped away to demonstrate for everyone a "thunder clap," striking his hands together with one pointed upward.

The skit combined visual elements of the Wabash Cannonball with the melody of

"Louie, Louie."

The tune's lyrics mentioned members of the K-State football team such as Head Coach Bill Snyder and running back Darren Sproles.

"Darren, Darren, hey, baby, don't let that Heisman go," the crowd chanted in unison before capping the phrase with a grunt and pelvic thrust.

"It's so different for everybody," Cassie Garza, freshman in secondary education, said. "Some people have rhythm, and some people don't."

"And it's so funny to watch the guys because they're not as coordinated, but we still give them encouragement."

Watching the group from his place on the grassy field,

Matt Swift, junior in political science and Spanish, said each house has the same goal in participating in the event.

"The competition varies with each house, depending on how seriously they take it, but in the end everybody's just trying to have a good time," said Swift, homecoming chair for DU.

DU has been a homecoming winner for four of the past five years, Swift said.

"For anything, once you get used to winning, it's pretty hard to go back to losing, and that's just kind of the way it is at our house," he said.

Pant the Chat is scheduled for 8 p.m. Wednesday at Ahearn Field House.

Practices, float-building among houses' preparations

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Greek houses across K-State have begun the process of preparing for the week's homecoming festivities.

Cody Whitney, senior in kinesiology and homecoming chair for Beta Sigma Psi, said his house members have been working on their float and yard art all week.

"We're just getting all the stuff that we have to do started and under way," Whitney said.

He said members have been preparing for the Wildcat Request Live and Pant the Chant contests, as well.

Whitney said Beta Sigma Psi members are working to honor the tradition of homecoming as their alumni come back.

He said they are paired with Gamma Phi Beta and Lambda Chi Alpha for this year's events.

Tiffany Deines, homecoming chair for Kappa Delta and junior in business marketing and human resource management, said Kappa Delta members have been practicing day and night for the event.

"This week we have been preparing ourselves and practicing every day, trying to get as much done as possible," Deines said.

Members of Kappa Delta, which has been paired with Sigma Nu, Phi Kappa Theta and Acacia, believe it's important to represent their house.

"It's really important to us, because it's representing our house and our alums and how we work together as a team," she said. "It also shows our spirit toward K-State and K-State Football."

Bobby Curiel, ritualist at Delta Tau Delta and junior in political science, said his house has started the yard art competition with one of their partners, Sigma Kappa sorority. They also are partnered with Beta Theta Pi fraternity.

Curiel said homecoming is about more than just floats and painted yards.

"It's more like a pride thing because a lot of alumni do come back for homecoming to see if your house won things," he said.

Austin Marsh, freshman in architecture, and Jacob Brown, freshman in chemistry, lean into the finish line at the end of the 5K race Sunday morning.

Homecoming gets political

By James Davison
BADGER HERALD (U. WISCONSIN)

MADISON, Wis. — The University of Wisconsin's Homecoming 2004 extends from the typical yearly celebration to the realm of politics with a theme that reflects a presidential election year.

"Bucky for President" is encouraging students to "register and get out to vote on Nov. 2!" according to a UW release. Bucky is the school's badger of a mascot.

The theme is designed to relate to all students on campus, according to Homecoming Committee co-chair Amy Duwell.

"We're a politically driven community," Duwell said. "So far we've had an amazing response from campus and the Madison community."

All 60 members of the committee are deputized for voter registration, which will allow students to register at every event during the week, according to Duwell.

Between 600 and 1,000 students registered Friday during MTV's Rock the Vote tour, which was their homecoming's opening event, she added.

Voter guides created by the Associated Students of Madison are also available.

"[Voter guides] identify candidates and issues relevant to students," Duwell said. "We are hoping everyone can make an educated decision when it comes down to voting on Nov. 2."

In addition to Friday's Rock the Vote, new events for this year include "Bucky's Inauguration Celebration" dance, a multicultural dance and a forum discussing UW's impact on the state of Wisconsin's economy. Students will also receive a discount on tickets to the Badger Huddle Saturday before the football game.

Despite a theme some may consider unique, many students view this year as just another homecoming celebration.

UW sophomore Matt Jaime said, although he only attended the football game last year, he saw more energy on campus and while attending the game. However, Jaime said he thinks anything that makes more people vote is good.

UW senior Jason Levin, on the other hand, said he is excited for Homecoming. He added he is typically involved with his fraternity, particularly the parade.

"The atmosphere around Madison is upbeat — [the city] reaches an extra level for Homecoming," Levin said.

Levin said he thinks the theme is clever, because it will get students to vote.

"I think it's good to get that kind of stuff out there, but personally [the political theme is not] anything that really got me more excited compared to past years," Levin said, adding the football team's successful season thus far adds more excitement than anything else.

Greek Homecoming pairings showcased their talents Monday night at Wildcat Request Live.

Each of the 11 groups had a maximum of four minutes and 30 seconds and 20 cast members for their routine.

The performances all featured dance routines with themes that varied from the Wild West to surfers to a theme from the Michael Jackson song, "Thriller."

The team of Gamma Phi Beta, Lambda Chi Alpha and Beta Sigma Psi members took home first place with their Wild West routine.

Second place went to Delta Delta Delta, Phi Gamma Delta and Kappa Sigma for their "Thriller" routine.

Alpha Xi Delta, Pi Kappa Alpha, Pi Kappa Phi and Alpha of Clovia received third place for their hip-hop routine performed to an original song about K-State.

Pi Beta Phi member Lauren Pederson, sophomore in elementary education, said her group prepared for about a month for the event.

"We had an amazing performance," she said.

Aaron Leiker, senior in electronic journalism, helped coordinate the event and said the event ran well.

"There were a few kinks here and there, but nothing we couldn't work out," he said.

Student Ambassador Kristy Tredway said the event was a big success.

"We had a lot of great performances tonight," she said.

Pack the Library, Pack the Polls is a serious letter writing campaign, but now, without comedian Mo Rocca, it will be no laughing matter.

Program advisor for the Union Program Council, Ben Hopper, said Rocca was slated to appear at Pack the Library, Pack the Polls. He said Rocca was supposed to be signing books and talking with students, before his performance at 7 p.m., but last night Rocca cancelled due to family problems.

"Mo Rocca will not be coming Wednesday," Hopper said. "We'll be talking tomorrow (Tuesday) night to see if we can reschedule it this semester or next semester. Currently, people can get refunds for their tickets if they go to the McCain box office."

Expert explains problems with U.S. foreign policy

There's a difference in the propaganda of fear purported by political officials, compared to the messages of fear generated by social activists, a Middle East expert said Monday night during a Lou Douglas lecture.

Politicians such as those in the Bush administration use false or incomplete information to sway Americans to supporting the war in Iraq, while activists "give people the kind of information that makes possible a different kind of fear that doesn't include paralysis," said Phyllis Bennis, director of the New Internationalism Program of the Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C.

"It's like osmosis. We absorb the fear. We absorb the idea that there's nothing we can do about it," she said. "There are things we can be afraid of, but there are things we can stop."

Bennis addressed the audience in Forum Hall

Dan Romans, junior in electrical engineering, tries to sweep off the giant letter 'K' as best as he can as he's being held up by a rope that is tied to a truck. The cleaning and repainting of K-Hill is done annually by the engineering honorary society Tau Beta Pi.

Face lift for a historic sign

Honorary society works to maintain famous K-Hill

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGLIAN

K-Hill got a makeover Sunday.

About 35 pledges and officers for the engineering honorary society Tau Beta Pi picked up trash, cut away weeds and put a fresh coat of whitewash on the giant K and S that are facing west over Manhattan, just south of Highway 177.

The service project is part of an annual tradition that started when the first letter was built in 1921, Tau Beta Pi Adviser Dick Hayter said.

The first letter, K is about 80 feet by 60 feet and cost about $350 to build. Construction of the K was funded and supervised by the engineering honorary society then named Sigma Tau.

In 1930, the honorary society raised about $500 to help fund the second letter, S which is about 90 feet by 60 feet. The original plan was to spell out the initials of the Kansas State Agricultural College to form KSAC.

Because of the university's ever changing name, the plan for K-Hill changed from KSAC to KSC, for Kansas State College, to KSU, for Kansas State University.

However, Hayter said the third letter, U, may never get done.

"There is a large dip where the third letter would go," he said. "We would have to put more land into the slope to level out the ground."

Sigma Tau received the deed for the face of K-Hill where the letters are located in 1947. However, due to legal reasons the organization gave the land to the Kansas Board of Regents. The university acquired the land in 1980.

The honorary society kept the maintenance rights to K-Hill and has continued the upkeep of the letters every year as the first service project for pledges.

Jared Mason, president of Tau Beta Pi, said for the most part, the process for the project has been the same over the years.

First, members are given trash bags and climb down the steep slope of K-Hill to clean up the area.

Then, students are lowered by a rope onto the letters to sweep them off. The rope is usually attached to a vehicle and students at the top of the hill help keep the rope tight.

Meanwhile, a mixture water and one 50 pound bag of lime to one 100 pound bag of cement is stirred by students to their desired consistency, Erin Pasold, vice president of Tau Beta Pi said.

The water for the mixture is provided by the Riley County Fire Department who brings a truck of water up to K-Hill each year.

Finally, pledges and officers form a chain down the letters and pass buckets of white wash to be poured on the letters.

Dan Romans, junior in electrical engineering, was brave enough to be roped up to sweep the letters.

"It's a little intimidating at first, but you get used to it," he said.

Hayter said as far as he can remember, there have been no serious injuries while doing the service project.

"I have never had anyone fall," he said.

Whitewashing the letters used to happen after the football game against University of Kansas, Hayter said.

"Pranks were popular, and they would come and paint it red and blue," he said.

Josh Van Meter, senior in mechanical engineering with nuclear option, throws a bucket of white paint on the lower portion of the K Sunday afternoon at K Hill. The paint is actually a mixture of white portland cement and hydrated lime mixed with water.

READERS' REPRESENTATIVE FOR THE COLLEGIAN

What is the purpose of the Collegian?

Is it just for giving out information, writing interesting articles and/or even to make the reader laugh every now and then, or does it have a higher purpose than that?

I believe it should have a greater purpose. The purpose I'm referring to is the ability to affect change.

Many students would like to see the Collegian use its visibility more to become a instrument of change and be able to solve and tackle tough issues and problems we have here in the K-State community and the world.

The Collegian has never run away from issues, but sometimes we, as a media source, need to not be afraid of getting involved with issues.

We at the Collegian have an awesome opportunity to make sure community issues are heard and discussed by the change-makers at K-State.

In talking to a number of students and readers of the Collegian, they expressed a desire to see the Collegian to expand its coverage of issues affecting the community.

As a member of the Collegian staff and a fellow student, I pride myself on trying to recognize the issues raised by you — the reader — and hopefully resolve those issues.

We sometimes get so caught up in the day-to-day events on campus that we forget that the student body is counting on us to help make K-State a better place for us all.

In the 1960s, when all the problems of civil rights and the Vietnam War era were going on, students at different universities could count on their school publications to not only show what was going on, but to help change the directions of certain issues.

There should be no difference 40 years later, even though we still have some of the same problems students had back then.

We have a controversial war going on, and young men and women our age are being killed for what some say is a unnecessary war.

We also have diversity issues like they had back then, right here at K-State, and there are other major issues we need to get out and try to be a part of changing them.

I have been speaking with some students in the past few days, about the Collegian in general. What I found was they believe, the Collegian needs to have more stories about people on campus and not so much focus on events and news that don't affect them.

I suggested if they would like to see more things about the student population and events that affect them, that they should call or e-mail their interests to the Collegian.

Some students think we as a student publication and a student body have lost a certain edge that the students had 40 years ago, when it comes to taking stands on certain hot debatable issues of the times.

Some of the reasons for this may be because we could be afraid to offend someone and consider the need to be politically correct.

Another cause may be what some perceive to be a lack of diversity on the Collegian staff — there may be very few with the perspective to see the entire community's problems.

That's a hint for you out there to come join us on staff.

It isn't only the Collegian's job to get issues out there; you as a student and reader of the paper also have an obligation to realize that the future of our society and community is in your hands.

So don't be afraid to contact the Collegian and any other media source with the issues and concerns you and your fellow students may face.

The Collegian and you, the students, have a great opportunity to change not only K-State policies, but to also make a difference in how our world and society is shaped and run in the future.

Just remember this — even if we do nothing and go through our daily lives not getting involved and not insisting on change, the world will still change.

Unfortunately, the world does not always change in our best interests.

I don't want that to happen, and that's why I'm the reader's advocate and open to get your thoughts and issues out there so we can change the world, or at least K-State.

Hall homecoming begins with Crazy Cat Kickoff

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A thunderous applause from a crowd of cheering and roaring fans revved up residence hall students for one of their first homecoming events, Crazy Cat Kickoff.

The event challenged several hall homecoming teams to games that may seem a little crazy or gross, but that makes the events fun, said Rachel Alicesteen, planning committee member.

"The odd events really attract the students," Alicesteen said.

As the crowd of 150 watched their teams compete, the excitement grew.

The competition started with "Candy Castle Construction," a challenge asking teams to build a castle of toothpicks and gumdrops. Association of Residence Halls executive board members judged the event.

ARH President Ryan Spencer said he wants to be able to say, "wow, that's wicked," when voting for the top castle.

The team of Strong Complex, West, and Marlatt Hall won the sticky event.

Then, homecoming teams asked 10 people from each team to compete in the "Extravagant Eggroll." Teams had to roll eggs with their noses. The team consisting of Smurthwaite, Ford, and Moore eventually won.

The third event was the "Frankenstein Walk," where one person from a team had to walk while balancing phone books on his or her head. Walkers had more phonebooks added to the stack as they went along. Jardine's representative, with six on her head, led Jardine to win the walk.

"The Human Sundae," however, really got the competition down and dirty, as teams decorated one person with ice cream sundae toppings. Haymaker and Goodnow won the event.

As team members tried cleaning up, teams were asked to race around and wear scarecrow clothes and hats in "Scarecrow Scamper," where teams had to compete in a three-legged race, then, exchange scarecrow clothing to other teammates.

And the final event of Crazy Cat Kickoff was the "Great Gummy Rescue," where teams had four minutes to dig gummy bears out of bowls filled with apple sauce with their feet. Haymaker and Goodnow won this event.

Standings for Crazy Cat Kickoff were Strong Complex, West, and Marlatt in first place; Haymaker and Goodnow in second; Smurthwaite, Ford, and Moore in third; and Jardine in fourth.

Local candidates, campaign officials set to participate in election forum

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Candidates are coming to K-State tonight, so students and Manhattan community members can learn more about their stance on issues.

Young Democrats and Students for Environmental Action are sponsoring the K-State Candidate Forum, which is dedicated to the memory of Barbara Meyer.

April Chancellor, vice president of Young Democrats, said 10 state, local and national candidates will be present at the forum, and Nancy Boyda and Jim Ryun are sending representatives.

She said there is a chance a few more may be present also. Out of the 12 who will be either represented or present, eight are Democrats and four are Republicans.

Chancellor said students should attend the event to become more informed.

"It's important for students to go, especially students that aren't from here," Chancellor said. "It's a good way for them to get acquainted with who's running."

The forum is at 7 tonight in Forum Hall.

Laura Wood, secretary of Young Democrats, said the forum is a great opportunity for students to go and ask questions.

"This is to get people aware of who's running and aware of the issues," Wood said. "It's a chance to put a name with a face."

Each candidate will have three minutes to talk, and then the forum will be opened to a question and answer session, she said.

The audience will write their questions on note cards, and when their question is asked by the moderator, the audience member will be referred to in order to be sure their question was answered fully, Wood said.

"We'll be sure to make sure they feel like their questions are answered," she said. "We're having a moderator to keep things organized."

She said audience members will also be allowed to ask questions directly.

After the forum, the candidates will mingle with audience members until about 9 p.m. Wood said people can ask them more questions then.

"I think it's important to be educated when you vote," she said. "Not to mention they can build a personal relationship with candidates."

Wood said it was appropriate to hold the forum in honor of Meyer, who was killed in a car accident Oct. 10, because she was an advocate for informed voting.

"She was always working to getting people more aware of what's going on in the world," she said.

Meyer was the president of Young Democrats and a member of several other organizations. She was also the Collegian opinion editor.

Willie Wake, vice president of SEA, agreed with Wood.

"I think she (Meyer) would have liked to see an educated electorate, and that's what we are trying to do," he said.

He said the forum is a great way for voters to become informed.

"It's really hard to understand all the different nuances each candidate represents, especially local ones, because they can't afford the airtime that national candidate can," Wake said.

"It's a good way to find out how candidates feel about issues people care about."

TO THE POINT Pentagon must accept blame for missing weapons

The Pentagon made a mistake — a big one.

Weapons, confirmed as being intact when U.S. troops arrived in Iraq in March 2003, are now missing. About 377 tons of conventional explosives from an Iraqi military installation have disappeared.

Poor military strategy and security are to blame. Now, there could be an even bigger threat against the U.S. if the weapons have fallen into the wrong hands.

The Bush administration and Pentagon officials used the threat of weapons of mass destruction as the reason to go to war.

The question arises why these weapons facilities were not closely guarded if weapons were the biggest threat.

Instead, military strategy seems to be focused on killing insurgents and protecting oil fields. The war seems to have become only a means for political and economic gain.

We trust the government to protect us, yet each day we are left wondering whose interests are really at stake.

The military should take responsibility for the mistake and work to ensure national security really is the focus of the war.

Reasons abound to remove Bush from office in upcoming vote

ALTAY KARIM

I had a nightmare last night. I saw Genghis Khan wearing his famous metal helmet with two stiff horns. He made a rocking claim that Bush and Cheney are his sweethearts.

Once, in the 1980s, Republicans had a similar claim about Pakistani dictator General Zia, who helped them to cultivate and raise the Taliban in Afghanistan against the former Soviet Union. After defeating the Soviets using the Taliban, the United States never looked back or took care of Afghanistan and its problems. Ultimately, Osama bin Laden made this land his home, and his brothers used to be the sweethearts of the Bush family.

What a trilogy of cannibalism, foolishness and blasphemy.

Bush's government disgraced itself and it let America down in the eyes of the world. Believe it or not, it has become a harsh reality and it shall be written in the history of the 21st century.

What's the remedy? Do not allow Bush to determine your and the world's fate for four more years. This is the only way to prove America is an alive and decent nation. As former secretary of state Henry Kissinger said, "America's credibility must not be squandered, especially by its leaders."

So, vote Bush down and lift America up. Let me give you a few reasons in support of this slogan.

1. The Bush administration released the U.S. Nuclear Posture Review in December 2001. It says there is a need to develop a new generation of nuclear weapons. There are also clear references to using the nuclear weapons against countries that do not have nuclear capabilities.

The United States already has around 3,000 nuclear weapons of mass destruction and it failed in finding a single WMD in Iraq. So, who is the danger to the world? What egotism it would be if Bush claimed the right of building weapons is only reserved for Americans and that no other nation is allowed to do the same.

2. It would be quite frightening if American people give the "License to Kill" to someone who has damaged his credibility by shoving more than 1,000 Americans into an unjustified war and forcing them to kill more than 10,000 innocent Iraqis.

3. Do you think it's a wise decision to just throw away $80 billion? You could have bought the whole continent, including Saddam Hussein, instead of spending this money to destroy a country and the American economy.

4. Violations of human rights at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo Bay prisons are the worst examples of abus-ing power and authority.

After the invasion of Iraq, Muslims at Abu Ghraib suffered humiliation as never before in world history. I could never understand why some sick-minded U.S. military officers were so interested in taking photographs of naked detainees by forcibly arranging them in various sexually explicit positions? Most were probably obsessed with the everlasting sexiness of "two thumbs up" circumcised penises of Muslims.

5. The Bush administration appointed a former CIA agent, Iyad Allawi, as the interim prime minister of Iraq. What kind of democracy is that?

6. The U.S. Army has destroyed the social security department of Iraq along with its other institutions. So there is no record available about who is an Iraqi citizen and who is a registered voter.

Now anyone living anywhere in the world can have a claim of Iraqi citizenship. Even Iraqi borders are completely insecure and open for terrorists. So what do you expect in terms of forthcoming Iraqi elections and democracy under these circumstances? Obviously, the value of Iraqi elections would not be more than a joke in democracy's name.

7. After the Iraqi invasion, porn movies are freely available to Iraqi children on streets of Baghdad. This came to me from a friend who lives in Baghdad and has seen it happen.

8. Three million Americans have lost their jobs under Bush's government.

9. You are tired of being lied to, and you want your civil liberties back.

10. According to KLAS-TV, Republican party officials presided over a voter registration scandal.

Vote Bush down, lift America up and save the world.

Caution necessary in stem cell research

On Oct. 10, actor Christopher Reeve passed away.

Within mere hours, the John Kerry and John Edwards political campaign latched onto and exploited Reeve's death by using Reeve's popularity to attack President Bush over his stem cell research policies.

This incident brings to the forefront a most highly contested and misunderstood topic in this year's presidential elections; stem cell research.

In truth, stem cell research holds the potential for miracle cures for many horrible and disabling diseases. It also opens what some would claim is a Pandora's Box, thus creating a contentious political and moral problem, which President Bush responded to with political tact, creating a compromising policy. This furthers research, while also allowing the American people to explore our inner morality at the same time.

On Aug. 9, 2001, the Bush administration passed a policy approving 78 sources of stem cells open for public research.

Many people have argued Bush's policy is nothing more than a cheap political trick, allowing him to effectively stop stem cell research, while claiming he supports it.

For Bush, this is a misrepresentation of his policy and position.

As the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette notes, while Bush limits public research, he never forbids private research. This decision needs to take into account that few companies and individuals have the resources needed to do stem cell research without government aid.

The genius of the Bush policy is it starts the United States down the road to further scientific discovery at a slow pace to help decide critical moral problems.

Such moral dilemmas abound, including whether stem cell research involves murder.

The New York Times reported that many critics of stem cell research see a moral dilemma in the fact that the research involves destroying a human embryo, which many consider to be a living human.

Another moral dilemma that needs to be addressed in any discussion of stem cell research is its effects on human cloning.

Stem cell research also raises the prospects of human cloning. As the Christian Science Monitor noted, stem cell research is a critical step in a human cloning program, and cloning is an issue which can never be taken lightly as a society.

Truly, this policy of slow going is the best response. Any other policy would be a failure.

Kerry and Edwards have played the proverbial stem cell card more than once — they also tried and capitalized on former U.S. President Ronald Reagan's death as well.

During the Democrat National Convention, Reagan's son extolled the promises of stem cell research and assaulted Bush at the same time.

In reality, such claims of the promise of stem cell research need to be taken with a grain of salt. While the future looks bright, no one is for certain as to whether anything will come of this research.

We don't even know if stem cell research will provide cures for anything.

However, in light of the copious moral dilemmas such research faces, the uncertainty of its practicality, taking the slow path is the best policy.

A day in the life of Kendra Wecker

Despite hectic schedule, basketball player makes time for the little things

BEYOND THE SPORT

This is the third installment in a five-part series profiling the challenges involved in being a successful student-athlete at K-State.

Next week: Part Four: Making It On His Own — A profile of Mark Frederick, a walk-on for the men's basketball team.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kendra Wecker's arms pumped as the bar rose and fell above her.

With every lift, the strain built in her face.

Her teammate, senior Megan Mahoney, stood behind her offering words of encouragement.

It was the middle of the afternoon on a Monday, and the K-State women's basketball team was lifting weights to prepare for the upcoming season.

For Wecker, a senior Wildcat forward, an afternoon workout is just one part of the busy schedule she has as a high-profile student-athlete.

A day in the life of Kendra Wecker can be hectic at times, but the basketball star has found ways to make sure it all balances out.

8:30 a.m. — Wecker's day starts out normally, as she wakes up, gets ready, has breakfast — a must for an athlete — and heads off to class.

When she is on campus, Wecker said she tries to keep a low profile.

"There will be students who come to our games that will come up and say, 'Hey Kendra, nice game last night' or 'you guys are playing well' or stuff like that," Wecker said. "I pretty much stay in one building, so I don't get out a whole lot. I get noticed more out in the community than on campus."

9:30 a.m. — Wecker attends class as an electronic journalism major. If basketball doesn't work out, Wecker one day hopes to be a sports broadcaster.

Finding the time to study for her classes is often a chore for Wecker.

Teammate Laurie Koehn said it is usually Wecker's own fault for being rushed

Fast facts

Kendra Wecker

- Wecker is an electronic journalism major
- She lives with teammates Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and former teammate Nicole Ohlde.
- As a junior in 2003-04, Wecker averaged 16.8 points per game and was First-Team All-Big 12.
- This first game for the Wildcats is Nov. 9 in an exhibition against Emporia State at Bramlage Coliseum.

with school work.

"Kendra is the queen of procrastination," Koehn said. "I always tell her she needs to get her stuff done, and she just puts it off. She stresses me out."

12:30 p.m. — When lunch rolls around, Wecker often displays another talent she has up her sleeve — cooking.

Wecker lives with teammates Mahoney and senior Laurie Koehn, as well as former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde.

Koehn said Wecker's cooking — or sometimes her mom's cooking — is enjoyed by the whole house.

"We benefit from her cooking every now and then," Koehn said. "Occasionally, she brings food her mom sent from home that she heats and serves to all of us. It's good stuff."

1:30 p.m. — Wecker's day gets difficult after lunch, when she reports to the gym for practice. She often takes part in an individual shooting workout or a pick-up game as part of practice.

Wecker's practice routine has helped her become one of the top players in the Big 12 Conference.

Last year, as a junior, Wecker averaged 16.8 points per game, good for fifth in the conference. She was named First Team All-Big 12 for the second year in a row last season, and she heads into this season as a candidate for the Wade Trophy, John R. Wooden and Naismith National Player of the Year awards.

3:00 p.m. — After practice, Wecker heads to the weight room for a workout with the team.

CFB | Snyder says Meier likely to be back for Saturday

During Monday's Big 12 Coaches Teleconference, K-State Coach Bill Snyder

confirmed comments from the previous day that sophomore quarterback Dylan Meier is expected to practice this week and will likely be back for Saturday's homecoming game versus Texas Tech.

Meier, K-State's No. 1 quarterback, missed last Saturday's 45-21 win against Nebraska due to injury.

For the latest on the Wildcats and Meier's status, read Wednesday's Kansas State Collegian for the K-State weekly press conference wrap-up.

In other football news, the Nov. 6 K-State/Missouri football game in Columbia, Mo. will be televised on Fox Sports Net at 11:30 a.m., the Big 12 Conference and FSN announced Monday.

It will be the fifth time this season a Wildcat game has been televised and the third time on FSN.

Florida coach Ron Zook was fired Monday after two-plus years and a stack of embarrassments on and off the field, satisfying a growing groundswell for his ouster that began the day he replaced Steve Spurrier.

Men's golf team ends season with record-setting play

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's golf team concluded its fall season at the Nelson Invitational this past weekend, as the Wildcats not only broke records but displayed their true capabilities, according to coaches and players.

The Wildcats combined for scores of 292, 271 and 286 (849) in the three-day tournament. Despite the seventh-place finish, the Wildcats shot the second lowest team score in K-State history with Saturday's round of 271.

Senior Matt Van Cleave said K-State's second round on Saturday was probably K-State's best team performance all season.

"We put up the low scores and showed that we are capable of competing with the top teams in the country," Van Cleave said. "Now, we just need to go out there and do it."

In a tournament as competitive as The Nelson, Van Cleave said the second round was a learning experience for the team, proving that K-State does have the ability to compete with teams like No. 1 New Mexico.

"The team had a great day," Coach Tim Norris said. "They rebounded really well."

Van Cleave paced the Wildcats, tying for ninth with an individual score of 210, while junior Ben Kern finished 12th with a score of 211. Kern's six-under-par, 63 second round set the tournament low and new K-State record, as well.

"We finally had three good scores and one really good score," Van Cleave said. "In order to be successful in tournaments, we need three solid scores and then someone to go really low, like Ben did."

Although pleased with his players' hard work and ability to fight back this fall season, Norris said the Wildcats are only playing good golf and are capable of taking it to the next level.

"Everyone needs to get a little better," Norris said. "If everyone could improve by one stroke — making a par instead of a bogey. It seems we are always just one round away."

Junior Jonathan James, who came from 61st to capture a 31st finish at The Nelson, said consistency has been a personal struggle, especially this past weekend.

"I was happy with the way that I finished," James said. "I just wish I could've played better in the first round."

With three months before the Wildcats' next tournament, each player will have time to focus on his individual game — be it consistency, or in Van Cleave's case, overall improvement.

"I feel like I have a lot of room for improvement," Van Cleave said. "When I show up at a tournament, I want to go in knowing I am playing my best possible golf."

As the team reflects on its fall season, James said there is plenty for the team to be optimistic about.

"When you enter a season with a new and young team, there is a lot that is unknown. We managed to shoot under par as a team a couple of times, which is always really good," James said. "Our confidence is up and that should bode well for spring."

Dylan's 'Chronicles' provides focused look at career

Bob Dylan's long-awaited autobiography is finally here, or at least the first of three installments of it.

Those familiar with Dylan's book "Tarantula," a novel made of prose poems, may be wary of "Chronicles," because they know how discursive and illusory this writing can be. These readers can set their fears aside.

"Chronicles" cuts through the mumbo jumbo, goes right down through the haze and tells it how it is. While much more focused than "Tarantula," "Chronicles" has not lost Dylan's illusory talents.

The stories in "Chronicles" wind around. While in a chapter about Dylan's experiences in Greenwich Village in the early 60s, he flashes back to a time when as a teenager he saw famous wrestler Gorgeous George and thought George admired the rock band he was in.

Gorgeous George has little to do with Greenwich Village, but the writing is inspired, and the story weaves its way back to the Village shortly.

The illusory aspect does not come from any fiction, at least nothing that is fictitious to Dylan. Dylan's willingness to accept the supernatural paints many scenes with an almost mystical ambience.

"Chronicles"

★★★★★

Album review by Matt Groneman

At one point in the book Dylan claims to have seen the ghost of John Wilkes Booth.

For Dylan, New Orleans – the setting of the chapter about the 1989 album "Oh Mercy" – is crawling with spiritual life.

Dylan accepts these things as truth, and in this way the book creates a logic all its own, but still the same logic that flavors so many of Dylan's best songs.

One of the strengths of Dylan's songs has always been the creation of incredibly deep and expansive characters such as Sweet Marie and the Brownsville Girl. What you learn in "Chronicles" is the characters aren't created, so much as recreated, from the vibrant personalities who have drifted in and out of Dylan's life.

Ray Gooch, a man Dylan lived with during his early days in New York, is a fascinating character who would be lost to history were it not for this document. Dylan portrays him to be larger than life – a 19th century Southern aristocrat opium smoker stuck in a time warp where the world is contingent upon an archaic system.

The rich mystery of Gooch's interaction with 1960's New York could be the Great American Novel were it not fact.

Just as interesting is a character named Sun Pie, a man who runs a store off the beaten track in Louisiana. Sun Pie is best described as an intense apocalyptic bundle of scattered and frayed neurons.

He asks Dylan if he prays, and when Dylan replies that he does. Sun Pie shoots back that he's going to have to be praying when the Chinese take over. Pie is a very weird cat, the kind who transforms a coffee cup into a conspiracy.

Dylan provides a great window to Sun Pie, and takes the risk in accepting him for us. Pie intrigues Dylan and the audience, but he's the kind of character you just want to observe, the kind that could only show up in a town like New Orleans.

Though the book is discursive and sometimes breaks into cliché, it allows one to peer right into the world which has formed one of America's greatest cultural caches.

So what does Dylan pray for? Simple.

"I pray that I can be a kinder person," he says. "I pray that I can be a kinder person."

Posthumous Elliott Smith album mixes dark, upbeat notes

"From a Basement on the Hill"

★★★★☆

Album review by Jessica Grant

Although most of his fans never knew him personally, the alleged suicide of singer/songwriter Elliott Smith last October rattled many.

This is the mark of a great musician. Smith had the ability to create music that often went unnoticed by mainstream radio, yet his sound was powerful enough to carry a resounding message that gained him loyal followers.

Smith is probably most noted for his 1998 Oscar nomination for work on the "Good Will Hunting" soundtrack. Fans know Smith as the man who went solo (after a stint with the post-punk band Heatmiser) yet he never really compromised his distinct down tempo sound.

Classic string arrangements, clear melodies, and sweeping piano were marks of Smith's acoustic sound and little has changed on "From a Basement on the Hill."

"I get a sick confusion headache trying to figure out what's right," Smith sang on Heatmiser's 1996 release "Mic City Sons" and this sentiment holds true to "From a Basement." It is a daunting task to try and unravel the artists influence on an album that was completed after Smith's death.

"From a Basement" opens with hazy "Coast to Coast," a song that slowly rises to jumbled and de-tuned guitars layered over light piano. The line "Anything I do will never be enough for you," perfectly accentuates the beautifully chaotic nature of the song.

But not all of the songs are dark in nature.

Despite its title, "Strung Out Again" is a three-minute tune that is languid yet heavy. The lines, "Don't even know where I'm going and I don't even want to know" may sound nihilistic, but there is a rather buoyant undertone to the piece.

"Memory Lane" is a song plucked so gentle that the cautionary content of the song is easily overlooked.

"A Fond Farewell" is probably the upbeat song that most Smith fans needed. The song's lyrical content is vague, and the listener is left wondering what Smith is really lauding.

For fans distraught by Smith's death, leaving though the album insert of Smith's posthumous release, "From a Basement on the Hill" is a sort of cathartic activity.

Sometimes visual cues can provide a sense of closure in ways that even Smith's own music cannot.

The booklet is largely handwritten and contains snapshots of Smith playing his guitar, a look of utter content adorning his face. And some faces just look better with a smile.

Elliott Smith had one of those faces.

Arcade Fire debut album sentimental, beautiful

"Funeral"

Album review by Tony Mark Sibilla

When a band is faced with a debut album, rarely is it going to choose a name that hints at death, mourning and finality.

But this is the name of the Arcade Fire's debut full-length, "Funeral." During the recording of the album, many of the band's aging family members passed away. Win Butler and Regine Chassagne, the husband and wife songwriting team, lost a grandfather (March 2004) and a grandmother (June 2003), respectively.

On top of their losses, band mate Richard Parry lost his aunt in April of this year.

Through the loss of these loved ones and the pain endured by their passing, the Arcade Fire manages an album with songs that have very bleak lyrical imagery.

The album's opening track, "Neighborhood #1 (Tunnels)," opens the album in a grandiose fashion with a sustained organ chord, swelling string section, and plinking piano line.

Butler's voice comes in strongly, but it waivers with emotion, telling the story of a young man who sneaks out of his house to meet with a girlfriend and naively plan their 'adult' futures while the young man's parents weep in their bedroom.

The second track, "Neighborhood #2 (Laika)," has lyrics that suggest an individual's struggle with suicidal desolation.

The imagery that features the individual coming home and fighting with his father is brilliant: "When daddy comes home you always start a fight/So the neighbors can dance in the police disco lights."

The centerpiece of the album is "Neighborhood #3 (Power Out)." The track's emotional weight coupled with its anthem-like guitar assault creates a powerful, towering song.

The song "Crown of Love" speaks of guilt felt by individuals pining for love. What is most interesting about the song is that it starts out in a slow piano lilt, and then gradually grows into a dance section filled with swelling strings.

The final song, "In the Backseat," is also wonderfully done as Chassagne sings of taking family rides and sitting in the backseat staring at the countryside.

Through self-examination the narrators are able to come to terms with themselves; it creates an optimistic tone, with acoustic guitar, lovely strings and Chassagne's own beautiful voice, on the end of a very emotional album.

Often times emotional music is looked upon very cynically (emo, anyone?), but the music of the Arcade Fire brings hope for the future of music with emotional weight.

Through a powerful song cycle of loss, grief and tragedy underlined with an urgent sense of optimism, we the listener can become enveloped in an album of sentiment and beauty.

LECTURE | Speaker urges world leaders to follow international law

through a speech called "Challenges to Empire: Iraq, the U.N. and the 'Second Super Power'." Bennis - who has drafted speeches and legislation for the U.S. Congress, in addition to appearing as a commentator and foreign policy expert in national news media - said the Bush administration led the country into an isolated position among the world community. "The U.S. is driving toward an unprecedented unilateralist and militarist position around the world," Bennis said. This has been particularly evident through the United States-led occupation of Iraq, which in some ways has violated the U.N. charter, she said. Article 51 of the charter grants countries an inherent right of self defense if an armed attack occurs, "until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security." Before the United States entered Iraq, the United Nations had fulfilled this requirement by sending weapons inspectors into Iraq and imposing sanctions on the country, Bennis said. But that's not the only time the United States has been selective about the degree to which it is willing to work with the United Nations, Bennis said. She cited a report in Newsday last week, which suggested Muslim countries were prepared to send troops to protect U.N. officials while they assist with elections in Iraq, but President Bush rejected the plan because it was not under U.S. military direction. Saddam Hussein's dictatorship was replaced by military occupation, and that is a choice no citizen should ever have to make or accept, she said. Bennis interacted with students during the day, visiting such classes as Introduction to Social and Political Philosophy, taught by John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy. "When the Bush administration said the Geneva Convention doesn't apply, that was an incredibly devastating attack on our own soldiers," Bennis said while fielding questions in Exdell's class. She repeated this point during the evening lecture, emphasizing that international law should be followed by the United States and all countries. "The coalition of the willing is a coalition of the coerced," she said about the $151 billion war in Iraq.

WECKER | Having fun, finding time to relax vital to student-athlete

With music playing over the speakers, she and workout partner Mahoney work on physical conditioning and weight training at an intense pace. Wecker does cardiovascular warm-ups before hitting the weights, which is followed by back and abdominal routines. After her workout routine, Wecker often visits the trainer's room for a quick treatment to revive her muscles.

5:30 p.m. - With practice finished, Wecker eats dinner with the team at Derby Dining Center, and afterward spends the night as she pleases. It is usually during the evening when Wecker chooses to hang out at her house to unwind from a long day. Mahoney said when she is at home, Wecker often goes unnoticed for periods at a time. "Kendra is pretty laid back," Mahoney said. "She just kind of hangs out, and sometimes you don't even know she's there."

A huge movie buff and self-taught guitar player, Wecker often uses her free time to do the things that help her relax. "To sit on the couch for a couple of hours and hang out with my roommates is great," Wecker said. "Any movie action movie intrigues me, or I enjoy watching TV, or I like to play my guitar a little bit!" With the season fast-approaching, keeping up with school and finding free time will become harder for Wecker. She said during the season, basketball often grabs the majority of her attention. "Keeping up in school is difficult, especially when we go on the road," Wecker said. "Studying on the road, for me, doesn't happen. I just can't concentrate on school work when we're flying or when we're in the hotel." Mahoney said the schedule can get rough, but the key is having a good time. "We all just try to keep things light and have fun, and it never gets too out of control," Mahoney said.

PACK THE POLLS | Celebrity's cancellation doesn't deter organizers

the Library, Pack the Polls. "I think it's unfortunate that Mr. Rocca had to withdraw due to his family emergency," King said. "But I don't think it will affect attendance at Pack the Library, Pack the Polls. I think people on campus understand the importance of the issues at hand."

"I think Mo Rocca would have been a fun thing and would have boosted the evening, but at the same time I don't think it will inhibit the attendance." Pack the Library, Pack the Polls is a letter writing campaign to legislators coupled with the capping of a voter registration drive King said. "Pack the Library is an event that we've held in the past, to extend the hours at the library and increase funding," King said. "This year we shifted the focus to Pack the Polls, which is part of our voter registration drive." King said the month long voter registration drive has been successful because SGA and various campus organizations visited several greek houses and residence halls, and collected over 130 registration cards and 150 absentee ballots.

King said students should come out and support the event, whether they want to get free pizza or write letters, because it's an all-campus event that affects everyone. "It's very important students come out and support K-State," King said. "It's an event for students by students. You can write letters about the condition of our university, your experiences and the costs."

Homecoming teams paint shop windows

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville windows received a touch of color during the annual Paint the Ville contest Tuesday.

Homecoming pairings were assigned a window based on a random drawing. The paintings had to be water based and completed by 4 p.m. for judging.

Andrea Bryant, homecoming chair, said all of the greek and residence hall pairings participated with three student organizations.

Jasey Crowl, senior in art education and member of Delta Upsilon, said his group went to Aggieville early to get started.

"We got here at about 9 a.m. but we had to go get some coffee," he said.

DU is paired with Delta Chi and Kappa Kappa Gamma on the theme, "Wild on the Little Apple."

Brian Sandon, junior in mechanical engineering and member of Delta Chi, said he thought of their design while working with Photoshop.

"I had a picture of the stadium, and I added effects to it like Willie and the Little Apple," he said.

Although the design took about 15 minutes, the rest of the group was impressed, Kappa Kappa Gamma member and freshman in business Claire Chapman said.

"They e-mailed it to us and we were like, 'wow, that's cool,'" she said.

The designs were judged on three concepts: creativity, adherence to the theme and overall appearance.

Sandon said the pairing got a good spot in front of Texas Star Cafe.

"We have a nice big window this year," he said. "The windows in front of Rusty's are too small and Kite's are too small."

Crowl and Sandon were chosen to participate in the contest for their artistic abilities, Sandon said.

Chapman, however said she got lucky.

"The homecoming chair for my house knew that I liked doing this kind of stuff, so she asked me," she said.

Candidates visit K-State for voters' forum

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sixteen candidates or representatives for candidates took the stage Tuesday night in Forum Hall to give three-minute speeches and answer questions.

The Barbara Meyer Voter Education Forum was sponsored by Young Democrats and Students for Environmental Action. It was moderated by Ben Fenwick, Young Democrat member and senior in political science.

The forum was held in memory of Barbara Meyer, former Young Democrat president who was killed in a car accident on Oct. 10.

The speeches began with the politicians at the state level, then moved to the local level and finished with the national level.

Among the issues discussed were funding for education.

Roger Reitz (R), who is running for Kansas senator in the 22nd District, said he is not afraid to raise taxes if nothing else can be done in order to give more funding to schools.

"If things don't change, we're going to look to new money," he said. "New money meaning tax increases."

Another issue brought up was health care problems in the state.

Gary Olds came as the representative for Jim Ryun (R), who is running for re-election for the 2nd District of the U.S. House of Representatives. Olds said the problem in Kansas lies with small businesses.

"In Kansas, the primary health care issue is in small business," he said. "We want to change the rules, so small businesses can get affordable health care."

Julie Govert Walter (D), who is running to be a state senator in the 22nd District, said she would work to make prescription drugs cheaper.

Alternative energy forms, particularly wind farms, were also discussed by multiple candidates.

Bob Newsome (R) and Geri Simon (D), who are running against each other to be Riley County Commissioner from the 2nd District, disagreed on whether farms, which could come to Manhattan, are good.

Simon said she opposed wind farms because they would not benefit the community.

"It wouldn't do a whole lot for the community, because you can't tax wind farms," she said. "Any energy produced would go out of state."

Newsome said he was for wind farms, partly because of high oil prices.

ELECTIONS 2004

Candidates come out on whether same-sex couples should be Lawfully wedded

By Christopher Harrop
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With less than a week remaining before the elections, two of the many issues on the minds of Kansas voters are same-sex marriage and civil unions.

But the issues' degree of relevance to Kansans depends largely on whom you ask.

Kansas is one of 39 states prohibiting same-sex marriage according to StateLine.org, and the issue has worked its way into the debate surrounding the election.

In the 2nd Congressional District, Rep. Jim Ryun (R) is vying for re-election versus Democratic challenger Nancy Boyda of Topeka and Libertarian candidate Dennis Hawver of Ozawie, Kan.

Jeff English, manager of the Nancy Boyda for Congress campaign, said the focus on same-sex marriage and civil unions this year has been disproportionate to other issues affecting Kansans and the nation as a whole.

"I think it's because (the same-sex marriage issue) has been brought up at the state level," English said. "But when we're out on the campaign trail, people we speak to are concerned about the war in Iraq and losing jobs."

"People are more concerned about those issues."

English said most issues have relevance, but Nancy Boyda's work as a member of Congress would first address other policy areas.

"To be honest, cultural issues are important, but there are more pressing issues that Kansans are concerned about," English said. "Jobs, health care and national security are at the top of the list."

Boyda's campaign Web site makes no mention of same-sex marriage or civil union in the "On The Issues" section.

Leigh Fine, senior in chemistry and president of Queer-Straight Alliance, said the on-campus concerns about equal treatment for homosexual couples in regard to marriage or civil unions are still quite valid in the upcoming election.

"I think a lot of QSA members, of course, want their relationships and very existence acknowledged and validated by our government," Fine said. "At the same time, we realize that oftentimes people who are against gay marriage tend to focus on that, as well."

Fine said the political climate in Kansas leads some candidates for office to avoid talking about same-sex marriage, but the opposite is true in other cases.

"We also recognize that (the issue) is something used by opponents to polarize and distract voters," Fine said.

For supporters of legal recognition of same-sex unions, Fine said geography is a large factor that sometimes complicates even family issues.

"It is very hard here (in Kansas), because very often our friends and family tell us they're voting for candidates who oppose gay marriage, like Sam Brownback and the president," Fine said.

Regardless of the upcoming election's influence of same-sex

College students deal with homesickness

Illustration by Jordan Mizell | COLLEGIAN

to schools as a "normal" applicant. The ultimate victor will win a full scholarship to the school of his or her choice.

STUDENTS MISS OUT ON FINANCIAL AID

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Each year, a growing number of potential financial aid recipients do not get money for one reason — they don't apply. A new study conducted by the American Council on Education states that half of the 8 million undergraduates enrolled from 1999 to 2000 at institutions participating in federal student aid programs did not complete the main Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA).

Several reasons explain students' lack of enthusiasm for financial aid. Some students do not think they have a chance to receive any money. Others are unaware of the process. For some, financial independence takes the pressure to apply off of parents.

Gabrielle Pendleton, freshman in engineering at the University of Illinois, said parental income can factor into the number of financial aid applications submitted.

"Many students think they are ineligible due to their parents' income or certain government standards that have been set," she said.

She also said students simply are not motivated to fill out the sometimes time-consuming forms.

"Sometimes it is just laziness," Pendleton said.

Swati Acharya, freshman in engineering, admitted she wasn't aware of the financial aid process in general, but she said for most people the forms "take way too long to fill out."

"People have college applications to fill out at the same time they are supposed to be filling out financial aid forms," she said.

DEKALB, Ill. — The semester is nearly half over, but some Northern Illinois University students are still dealing with homesickness.

Brian Pillsbury, a psychologist at the NIU counseling and student development center, said the first few weeks are the most difficult for new students. He also said homesickness is a good example of what the center can help students with.

"A lot of people see the counseling center as only talking to people who have really serious issues. Something like this is a very normal issue, and talking to a counselor doesn't mean you're crazy," Pillsbury said.

Trying to adjust to many new things can be problematic. Students have worries about getting along with a roommate or succeeding in their classes.

"There's a real kind of conflict between hope for what might happen here and for fear about the unknown," Pillsbury said.

"I missed mostly my family. I missed my friends, too, and my house and everything familiar to you," said Amanda Hoetzer, a freshman undecided liberal arts and sciences major.

Cell phones and the Internet make it easy for students to keep in touch with family. But, when adjusting to college, it is important for some students to give time to their new lifestyle, too.

"My mom told me I wasn't allowed to call home as much anymore, and she said I couldn't come home as much," Hoetzer said.

REALITY SHOW OFFERS FREE TUITION

WASHINGTON — The search is on for contestants for a new reality show, different from any other program of its kind. The prize: A fully paid-for college education at any school in the country.

A new unscripted reality show, tentatively called "The Scholar" will pit 15 qualified high school seniors against each other for the chance to win a free education at the college or university of their choice. The selected contestants will be students who want to further their educations but might not have the monetary means to do so.

Steve Martin's production company, Martin/Stein is teaming with ABC, the reality veteran Bunim-Murray, producer of "The Real World" and "The Simple Life," and Carsey-Warner, producer of shows like "The Cosby Show" and "That '70s Show," for the show they hope to air in 2005.

"Every student in this country should be entitled to a college education," said Steve Martin and Joan Stein, of Martin/Stein in a press release. "With this show, we intend to empower both students and parents with the knowledge that a higher education is realistic and attainable for everyone."

The show does not, however, guarantee admission to any school in the country, and the winner must apply

6 finalists compete for ambassador positions

Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six students were chosen as finalists for the two K-State Student Ambassador positions.

The six finalists are expected to participate in numerous homecoming week activities, including the parade.

At the end of the week the winners will be announced during the football game Saturday.

Meet the candidates, who provided responses to the following questions: What is your greatest challenge to overcome in projecting a positive image about K-State? And, what qualities do you have that will allow you to succeed in the role of an ambassador?

WHITNEY COEN, JUNIOR IN AGRICULTURAL ECONOMICS Challenges

As K-State students and supporters, we know that K-State offers a wide range of experiences and opportunities and provides a diverse campus. However, being a university in a small Kansas town, my greatest challenge will be to overcome preconceived stereotypes and show K-State as a diverse and cultured university.

Coen

Qualities

Through the organizations I have been involved with at K-State, especially Student Alumni Board, I have developed and been able to put into practice good people skills. I am a good communicator, I enjoy meeting and getting to know new people, and I'm a team player. On top of this, I am passionate about K-State. This passion shines through as I meet people and make a positive impression for our university. My passion and ability to work with people will allow me to succeed as an ambassador.

LINDSEY GEORGE, SENIOR IN AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION Challenges

The greatest challenge facing K-State is that the diversity of our campus is often overlooked. Many people only see K-State as an agricultural school, engineering school or any one of our other great departments. We all know that our campus is more than that and offers a broad range of programs and classes to fit the needs of each student. The assortment of opportunities available to our students is overlooked. K-State students can participate in campus groups, intramurals, study abroad, internships, and many other activities. The possibilities are endless. Overall, the greatest challenge to overcome in projecting a positive image is the stereotypes that our university faces. We can change that by simply getting the word out about what is really happening here at K-State.

George

Qualities

My past experience and desire to serve K-State give me the knowledge and skill to be a successful K-State ambassador. For the past three years, I have been active in the following organizations: Blue Key Senior Honorary, College of Agriculture Ambassadors, Kappa Alpha Theta, and Student Alumni Board. My leadership style and public speaking skills have grown through these groups. I have introduced new and perspective students to campus, as well as provided alumni members with a connection to their alma mater. Finally, but probably most important, is my desire to serve K-State. I cannot think of a better way to use my talents than by sharing my K-State story with others. This excitement, along with my past experiences, has prepared me to be a successful K-State ambassador.

JASON HEASER, JUNIOR IN POLITICAL SCIENCE Challenges

Challenges

The greatest challenge we are facing as students and potential representatives is the continual rise in tuition. I would counter this challenge by listing some of the benefits that have come from these increases; such as classroom improvements, increase student wages, the Readership program and Wildcat Warmup.

Heaser

Qualities

My positive and outgoing personality would be key to my success if I were to be elected Student Ambassador. These traits have allowed me to network across campus and the community, thus giving me the opportunity to better relate specific stories and people to a prospective student's question. Also, my work as a member of the Manhattan Fire Department and the U.S. Army, both active and ROTC, has given me the confidence to approach anyone in any situation, with an open and friendly attitude.

KENT HILDEBRAND, JUNIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION AND JOURNALISM Challenges

The misconception that K-State doesn't have as much to offer as universities in more central locations. Just because there's no beach or mountains or Broadway district, doesn't mean a student can't be entertained year-round. We've got cultural and diversity events, art, great concerts (Bob Dylan!), Aggieville, the Konza Prairie, Pillsbury Crossing, Tuttle Creek and all right here.

Hildebrand

Qualities

My mom says it's my charm and good looks. Most important though, I have a passion for K-State and a desire to see others enjoy what it has to offer, as much as I have.

SUSIE KNETTER, JUNIOR IN AGRICULTURAL COMMUNICATIONS AND ANIMAL SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY Challenges

I think one of K-State's greatest attributes is the diversity of opportunities we have on campus. Some people still see us as just an agricultural school, when we have so much more to offer our students.

Knetter

Qualities

I have a passion for this university, and my experiences here as a student have taught me a great respect for it, as well. I believe my enthusiasm for every aspect of K-State shows in everything that I do.

ABDUL YAHAYA, JUNIOR IN CIVIL ENGINEERING Challenges

The greatest challenge to overcome is ignorance. The only way to overcome this is with education, because you can't fault someone who doesn't know, but if you teach someone how to reason and think, then the true image of K-State can be projected in everything the university stands for.

Yahaya

Qualities

Experience and determination are my best two qualities that will help me succeed in the role as a K-State ambassador. I am presently a multicultural ambassador for the university, which has given me confidence to be able to hold an ambassador position. Determination is what drives me everyday, because everyday I'm faced with adversity and everyday I overcome that adversity.

TO THE POINT

Benefits of marriage should extend to same-sex civil unions

All citizens are entitled to fair and equal treatment under the law, but the government fails to provide such treatment to citizens seeking equal legal recognition of same-sex unions and benefits associated with it.

While marriage has long been considered a union between one man and one woman, there is no good reason to not recognize similar bonds of matrimony between two consenting adults.

If the government will continue to regulate religion, it must do so equally and fairly for citizens regardless of their sexual orientation.

As many politicians try to prohibit the government from recognizing same-sex unions, many also have attempted to amend constitutions, both state and federal, to legally define marriage as a union between a man and a woman. These attempts further the hurtful division between citizens of different sexual orientation.

Marriage is an important institution in our society, and to properly preserve it the government must discontinue its divisive policies and allow two consenting adults to enter into such a bond without question of their respective genders.

At the same time, the legal benefits of marriage must be conferred to members of same-sex unions to bridge the gap that has, for far too long, divided us all.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

A matter of life and death

Stem cell research benefits, doesn't kill

Though there have been several hot points in the debates between President George W. Bush and Sen. John Kerry, the importance of stem cell research has largely been ignored.

Though the war in Iraq is the country's main focus at the moment, the candidates could be focusing on funding for stem cell research as well, a topic that could polarize voters and make this election a heck of a lot easier.

But a lot of people don't know very much about stem-cell research or what it entails, so here's some background information:

According to MSNBC, in 2001 Bush placed spending limitations on stem cell research, a medical development that has a promising future in helping cure diseases like Alzheimer's and diabetes.

This halt in funding limited researchers to using only stem cell lines that were already in existence in August 2001.

Since then, stem cell researchers have made little progress in their work. However, with the death of former President Ronald Reagan, a long-time Alzheimer's sufferer, the Reagan family has lead a public outcry for more research.

Bush's main reason for limiting funding for stem cell research has been that harvesting stem cells from a few days-old embryo destroy it, making this process what many people would call an abortion.

This research method goes against his core beliefs as a Republican.

I am pro-choice. I do not believe that life begins at conception. I've taken the same science classes that everyone else has and, in my opinion, that little cluster of cells called an embryo is just that: a cluster of cells.

But regardless of what we think in terms of life beginning at conception, we must weigh the importance of that little cluster of cells against the lives of our loved ones. Your father, your sister, your grandmother and maybe even you could be inflicted with one of the many diseases for which stem cell researchers might find a cure.

Kerry believes life begins at conception. Yet he is able to look past that and support stem cell research because he realizes its importance.

Bush's near-sightedness does not allow him to see the many benefits and medical miracles that could come out of stem cell research.

His claims that stem cell research is in preliminary stages is no excuse for his stance on the subject. It cannot move forward out of the preliminary stages without funding. He is the cause of his own excuse for not supporting it.

And Bush's excuse for not supporting all stem cell research seems truly based in his party affiliation.

In support of his viewpoint, First Lady Laura Bush has said, "the President's policy makes it possible for researchers to explore the potential of stem cell (research) while respecting the moral and ethical implications associated with this research," as reported by MSNBC News.

Bush's camp is trying to put a positive spin on his position, claiming he is the first president to fund stem cell research, which is true.

However, the only reason it's true is that stem cell research had not matured during Bill Clinton's presidency.

Clinton's policy would have paid for research using stem cell lines created at any time.

This fact, and that Kerry is willing to support further research on stem cells and their potential benefits, shows Bush is hung up on his party's platform.

Bush is not truly interested in the future health and well-being of Americans. He is more concerned about a cluster of cells residing in a petrie dish and what his pro-life constituents will think of his actions regarding this matter.

Pro-lifers should see stem cell research as a way of choosing life; not at the level of an embryo, but that of someone they love.

Invocation of religion in politics a dangerous idea

The First Amendment starts with, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..."

These 16 words were meant to keep the government from trying to use religion as a means to further its control of the people. I wonder if the founding fathers ever thought that religion might try to take control of the government.

Before I continue, I am pro-life, anti-choice... whatever you want to call me. I'm beyond caring about what anyone thinks anymore.

What I do care about is how certain religious organizations and leaders (you know who you are) have been using God's word to force people to vote for a certain presidential candidate on the issue of abortion, woman's choice; once again, I fail to care what you call it.

Few endorse a certain candidate outright, which can screw up their non-profit tax status.

Many others, however, use plenty of loaded dialogue to tell people that if they vote for a candidate who thinks the wrong way, they will burn in hell forever. I'm no expert, but if threats of eternal subterranean punishment don't qualify as voter intimidation, what does?

God is good, wise, caring, just and all sorts of other nice things. Whether you address the almighty as him or her, I don't care. God is awesome either way.

Government isn't. It is evil, stupid, apathetic, unfair, and all sorts of other bad things. If you consider it male or female, you're either bitter or obsessed over something petty, and I definitely don't care either way.

Back to the point, which is that no matter how fast you run the blender, religion and politics don't mix well. Try making a milkshake with beer and rotten fish, and you'll get the idea.

Religion forms guidelines for how we make choices, and it changes from person to person. Government is universal for all of us, it's how we make decisions for everybody else.

Thus, when we decide on the issue of you-know-what, we need to think it out for ourselves. Do we outlaw it, restrict it, allow it? Instead of doing whatever the clerics demand, make the decision in your own mind, based on what you think.

As for the religious leaders and family members who will most assuredly condemn me to hell for these statements, I have one question: Is it better to do the will of the Lord because you're told to, or because you choose to?

The church can tell people not to do something, that's just fine. When it tells people to enforce that on other people, it ceases to be noble and becomes a force of oppression.

Not to mention that there's more than one issue that matters in each election. Voting for a person just because they oppose something is dangerous.

Sure, someone might be against abortion, but what about foreign policy or any other issue that directly affects us? Should they simply be forgotten?

Decisions on things like what you do on your own and the like can be left up entirely to personal inspiration. When the subject becomes the standards we impose on others, however, we need to look to reason instead.

Vote for whoever you want. I won't be mad, I promise.

Dylan mixes old, new sounds at Bramlage concert

By Matt Groneman
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last night Bob Dylan, dressed in a black suit with red-striped pants, a black cowboy hat, and a red shirt with a rhinestone-studded collar, played a concert at Bramlage Coliseum.

Dylan played 16 songs including, "Highway 61 Revisited," "Floater," "Like A Rolling Stone," and "All Along the Watchtower."

The songs spanned Dylan's lengthy career, from 1963 to 2001.

Don Williams, Junction City resident, said he had heard some of them before when he saw Dylan in 1965.

"He played some of the same songs he did then, but different versions," Williams said.

"In 1965 Dylan had just started playing electric guitar, and many fans booed him. I didn't boo him, but a lot of people did. I kind of like both rock 'n' roll and folk."

Williams said the main difference was that back then the concerts were half folk, and now they are mostly rock 'n' roll.

"Before he played more of the Blowin' In the Wind-sier stuff," Williams said.

Williams said he didn't mind the changes to the songs.

"I'd probably go with the new, actually," he said.

Williams also said many songs Dylan played reminded him of older versions.

"All Along the Watchtower was originally country, but the new (sound) went back to a different old (sound) tonight, and he played it like Hendrix," Williams said.

The heavy use of steel guitar, played by multi-instrumentalist Larry Campbell, also reminded Williams of Dylan's older style.

"The steel guitar went back to his 70s days," Williams said.

Williams' daughter, Nicole Williams, Topeka resident, said she also enjoyed the concert.

"I thought it was awesome," she said. "I'd expected it to be more mellow. It was high energy, and I like that."

Nicole said the worst thing about the concert was Dylan's voice.

"Most of the concert I couldn't understand anything he was saying, so I had to focus on the music," she said.

Don Williams said he agreed.

"Sometimes I had to wait for the chorus and then I'd say, 'I know what he's singing there,'" he said.

This was Nicole's first Bob Dylan concert.

"I just recently discovered him and it was like, 'Wow,'" she said.

Another Dylan fan going to their first concert was Oskar Dohrmann, junior in business. Dohrmann is from Sweden and was happy to see a concert in the United States.

Dohrmann said it was a good concert.

"My favorite is 'Like A Rolling Stone,'" Dohrmann said. "The music was what I expected. But I'm not used to seats (at concerts)."

'Law & Order' viewers vote on character

"Law & Order: Criminal Intent" viewers gave the villainous character Nicole Wallace, played by Olivia d'Abo, a stay of execution Sunday.

During the Oct. 17 episode of the NBC drama series, audiences on the East Coast witnessed the bad gal's escape from police Detectives Robert Goren (Vincent D'Onofrio) and Alexandra Eames (Kathryn Erbe), while West Coast viewers saw Wallace dead. Visitors to the network's Web site could then see both endings and vote whether the character would live or die.

On Sunday's episode, it was revealed that Wallace didn't bite the dust. According to the Web site, there were 62,074 votes for her to live while 54,224 wanted to see the character dead.

"We are very gratified by the response," executive producer Rene Balcer said last week. "We've always seen this as a gift to our fans, to thank them for their continuing dedication to the series."

Island Def Jam talks with rapper Jay-Z

Jay-Z is in final negotiations to become president of Universal Music Group's Island Def Jam label, a source familiar with the negotiations said Tuesday.

Discussions with the superstar rapper, whose real name is Shawn Carter, have been going on for weeks. Barring any last-minute snags, a deal should be finalized within seven to 10 days, according to the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Although many artists eventually become executives, it's a rare move for one with Jay-Z's current fame.

It's expected Jay-Z will be signed to a three year deal, the source said.

Meier slated to start versus Texas Tech Saturday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Battling injuries has been a theme of Dylan Meier's first year as K-State's starting quarterback, and after a week off to heal, the sophomore quarterback should make his return to the starting lineup against Texas Tech on Saturday.

At K-State's weekly press conference on Tuesday, Coach Bill Snyder said Meier is expected to make his first start since the Oct. 16 Oklahoma game.

"Dylan will start," Snyder said. "That's our intent."

In his last start, Meier completed 20 of 38 passes for 242 yards and one touchdown against the Sooners before a hit knocked him out of the game in the fourth quarter. Meier was forced to sit out last Saturday's 45-21 win against Nebraska.

"I feel ready to go," Meier said. "Last week was tough on me, but all I can do is look forward."

In Meier's absence, sophomore quarterback Allen Webb had a career day in his third career start. Webb overran the Cornhusker defense for 271 yards of total offense and four touchdowns.

Snyder said that despite Webb's breakthrough performance, Meier is still the Wildcats' No. 1 quarterback.

"What is really a very positive aspect of this past weekend is it has allowed us to understand that we do have a No. 2 quarterback who can be beneficial for you when he is on the field," Snyder said.

"You never really go in with the idea that your No. 2 guy is going to play a certain amount of time, but if the opportunity arises and the need really arises, then we have no fear of putting Allen Webb in."

Meier currently ranks sixth in the Big 12 Conference in passing efficiency at 132.4 and is second in the conference in yardage, averaging 245.7 yards through the air per game.

The Pittsburg, Kan., native said although he did not take a snap against Nebraska, getting his rhythm back won't be a problem.

"It may take a little bit to find my rhythm again, but that is what practice is for," Meier said. "I think once I get into the game, I'll be fine and everything will come back."

CONTROLLING OWN DESTINY

The Wildcats' win over Nebraska gave K-State (3-4, 1-3) its first conference win of the season and with every team in the North Division having at least two losses, the title is far from being determined.

When asked if the Wildcats have more of a chance at controlling its own destiny, Snyder said it is not something that concerns him.

"There's still some games out there that you still have to have some help with, but for us to spend very much time trying to decipher that is fruitless," Snyder said. "What really needs to take place is that we need to win this week. If we win, then the rest of it will take care of itself."

Saturday's game against Texas Tech (4-3, 2-2) marks the first time the two schools have met since 2001, with the Red Raiders leading the all-time series 4-3.

The game is set to kickoff at 6:10 p.m. at KSU Stadium and will be televised live on Fox Sports Net.

MLB | Red Sox one win away from World Series title

Get ready, Boston. There's no other outcome now.

The Red Sox will either win the World Series or add another historic collapse to their legend. They'll either reverse the Curse and end 86 years of futility, or they'll fall apart, just as they did the last four times they got this close.

Pedro Martinez made his long-awaited Series debut a special one, bailed out when Manny Ramirez and David Ortiz did as much damage with their arms as bats. Backed by the surprising show of defense, Boston cruised past St. Louis 4-1 Tuesday night for a 3-0 lead and left a crowd that loves its Cardinals booing the home team.

Until this October, it was considered almost impossible for any baseball team to recover from such a deficit in the postseason.

No one had ever done it — that is, until the Red Sox bounced back to stun New York in the AL championship series.

And now, after being only three outs away from getting swept last week, Boston is on the verge of sweeping the club that led the majors in wins this year and claiming the ultimate prize.

Derek Lowe will try to finish it off Wednesday night, with Jason Marquis starting Game 4 for St. Louis.

Intramural volleyball season opens; participants prepare to compete

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Intramural volleyball started last week, giving students a chance to exercise while showing their skills on the court.

Out of all of the intramural sports, volleyball has the second-most participants behind flag football, and this year's numbers are up.

There are three divisions: men's, women's and co-recreational. This year, those three divisions combined for a total of 240 teams.

Intramural Coordinator John Wondra said this is about a 20-team increase from last year. He said the biggest increase in teams came from the women's division, which had a 21-percent increase.

Wondra said part of this can be attributed to the already high participation of women in this sport.

"This is a great sport for the women's side. They really get involved, and there are usually more women's teams," Wondra said.

Valerie Waldschmidt, junior in business finance, said volleyball is more of a women's sport. After competing on a co-rec team last year and playing in the all-girls division this year, Waldschmidt said there are differences between the two.

"It is more fun with just girls, because they think about setting it up. There's more emotion in it, because it was a girls' sport in high school," Waldschmidt said.

Waldschmidt said part of the high participation in volleyball may be because people are trying to get more active and because of a recent health kick in the United States.

Nathan Vallette, junior in radio and television broadcasting, said one reason people get involved is because even though volleyball can be physically demanding, it's not a huge time commitment, so it still fits into student schedules.

Vallette is on a residence hall men's team and, as a resident assistant, said he is trying to build more friendships through his floor.

One reason Vallette said he enjoys volleyball is because on any given day, any team can win — even if you are a beginner.

"It takes communication and patience and you have to depend on other people, but at any time, anyone can come out and win," Vallette said.

Vallette said volleyball is a good sport, it isn't all about trash talk and most people who play show good sportsmanship.

Waldschmidt said her favorite part besides winning is getting exercise without being bored.

"I like being with my friends and it is a more relaxed way to exercise. You don't feel like you are just on a machine forever, so it makes it more fun," Waldschmidt said.

Florida coach deserved chance to prove himself before being fired

Florida Gator fans have been looking for an excuse to fire head coach Ron Zook before he ever coached a single game, and now they got their wish.

After a 38-31 loss to Mississippi State, one of the worst Division I-A schools in the nation, the Gators announced on Monday Zook would be fired at the end of the season.

In his three seasons as the main man after the "Old Ball Coach" — Steve Spurrier — left for greener pastures, Zook compiled a 20-13 overall record and is 4-3 in 2004.

From day one as Florida's head coach, Zook faced the daunting task of replacing Spurrier who had won a national championship and created one of the most feared college football teams in the nation. Fans even started up a Web site dedicated to getting Zook fired before he ever coached a football game in Gainesville, Fla.

It's amazing he even lasted this long. In his previous two seasons, Zook's job was saved by late-season winning streaks, but the loss to the Bulldogs was the last straw. Athletic Director Jeremy Foley bowed to the pressure of the fans and alumni.

I'm not saying Zook is an angel — considering he was involved in an altercation with some fraternity members earlier in the season — but he never got a chance to prove himself.

Florida fans were spoiled during Spurrier's 12 years as head coach. They expected to win every game and be in contention for the national title every year — unreal expectations for a man replacing a legend.

What fans seem to be most upset about, besides the disappointing loss to Mississippi State, was Zook's home record. Under Spurrier, the Gators lost only six home games, while Zook lost six in the "Swamp" in only three years.

When Spurrier left for the National Football League, the blue and orange faithful gratefully said, "thanks for everything, and good luck with the Redskins." But as soon as he was gone, they wanted the Florida administration to not hire anybody that wasn't Spurrier.

I have to think Gator fans wouldn't have given any coach a chance.

Another problem I have with Zook's removal is the timing — seven games into the season.

It hurts the Gators' recruiting, the team's morale and now, Zook and his entire coaching staff are lame ducks.

What possible reason would he and the other coaches have to continue to work hard and prepare their team for its last four games, which include No. 5 Florida State and No. 10 Georgia?

Despite a few fair-weather fans, at least most fans of K-State football are not quite as fickle.

The purple and white faithful could have easily called for Coach Bill Snyder's head after his loss to Kansas for the first time in 11 years and his sub .500 record so far in 2004. However, unlike Zook, Snyder built his program from the ground up.

The expectations were not nearly as high in 1989 when Snyder took over one of the worst college football programs in the nation. K-State fans owe their allegiance to Snyder for turning the Wildcats into a nationally-recognized team.

That being said, I have a feeling K-State fans might pull a "Gator" when the day comes that Snyder is no longer roaming the sidelines at KSU Stadium.

FORUM

Candidates offer insights, platforms

"I'm for any type of alternative energy," he said. "Energy affects everyone."

Audience members said the forum was helpful and informative.

Kate Gorton, senior in communications science and disorders, said she came to find out what the candidates were going to say.

"I've definitely changed my mind on some of the candidates," she said.

Adam Childs, graduate student in computer science, said he thought the forum was informative.

"I don't know if it changed who I was going to vote for, but it was definitely informative," he said.

Candidates and representatives present at the forum

■ Tom Hawk (D) is running against Joe McGraw (R) for the state house representative in the 57th District.

■ Sydney Carlin (D) is running for re-election for the 66th district house against Paul Barker-R, who was represented by his campaign manager.

■ Julie Govert Walter (D) is running against Roger Reitz (R) to be state senator for the 22nd District.

■ Bob Newsome (R) is running for re-election for 2nd District Riley County Commissioner against Geri Simon (D).

■ Barry Wilkerson (R) and Chris Getty (D) are running against each other for Riley County Attorney.

■ Eileen King (R) is running for re-election against Stacy Lane (D) for the Riley County treasurer position.

■ Kathy Martin (R), who is running unopposed to be a Board of Education member, was also present.

■ Representatives for Nancy Boyda (D) and Jim Ryun (R) spoke on their behalf. Ryun is running for re-election against Boyda for the U.S. House of Representative for the 2nd District.

■ Sam Brownback (R) had a representative present, but Lee Jones (D) was unable to attend or send a representative. Brownback is running for re-election for U.S. Senate versus Jones, Libertarian candidate Steve Rosile and Reform candidate George Cook.

GAY MARRIAGE | House candidates offer opinions

union policies, Fine believes there is hope for supporters of same-sex marriage and unions.

"It is frustrating, being here in Kansas and running into that, but you can be around people in QSA who are sympathetic, and it helps," Fine said.

Eric Haar, campaign manager for Jim Ryun, did not return a call for comment on the issue, but the campaign issued an official statement.

"I support the Marriage Protection Amendment which clearly defines marriage as between one man and one woman," the statement said. "God created the sacred institution of marriage as the very cornerstone of the family and society."

"Unfortunately, activist judges are trying to undermine the will of the people on this issue in states like Kansas. If re-elected, I will continue to fight to protect marriage and families."

Rep. Ryun recently spoke on the floor of the House during debate on the federal Marriage Protection Amendment.

"The Marriage Protection Amendment will ensure that the definition of marriage in America does not change based upon the whim of an activist judge," Ryun said.

A vote on Sept. 30 failed to approve the measure, falling 49 votes shy of a two-thirds majority.

Ryun and fellow Kansas GOP representatives Jerry Moran and Todd Tiahrt were among the 227 members voting in favor of the amendment. Dennis Moore (D), 3rd District representative, voted against the amendment.

Ryun previously has voted in favor of similar initiatives, including The Marriage Protection Act (HR 3313), which was introduced to the House in October 2003, received in the Senate and referred to the judiciary committee Sept. 7.

When asked to draw contrast between Boyda's stance on the issue and that of Ryun, English said the campaign has made those distinctions clear in the minds of voters.

"The people of Kansas know where Nancy stands," English said.

Student's condition improves

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael K. Brothers is in improved condition after he fell from the second story of Alpha Tau Omega at 1:30 a.m. Thursday.

Brothers, Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity member and junior in history, sustained several fractures but no brain injuries.

Brothers was life-flighted to Wichita after his fall.

Craig Doane, Alpha Gamma Rho president, said Brothers' condition is improved.

"His condition is very promising, and there are no life-threatening injuries," Doane said.

Scott Jones, Greek Affairs director, said he has not talked to any of Brothers' family since Tuesday.

Doane declined to comment on what Brothers was doing at the time of the fall.

Doane said he and other Alpha Gamma Rho members have sent Brothers a card and are trying to support his family.

"He was really active in homecoming," Doane said. "He did a lot for Wildcat Request Live and Pant the Chant."

Doane said he is unsure of when Brothers will return back to K-State.

RCPD arrests woman in murder case

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan woman has been arrested for murder for an ongoing investigation by the Chicago Police Department.

Paula Turner, 730 Allen Road, No. 77, was arrested Tuesday morning for murder and armed robbery.

She is being held at Riley County Jail with no bond, said Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department.

Turner was previously arrested on Oct. 19 for for aiding and abetting as well as endangering a child.

The RCPD assisted the Chicago Police Department in arresting two murder suspects on Oct. 16.

Spc. Pierre M. Cole, 22, of Chicago, was arrested at the Blue Valley Trailer Court. Cole was a member of Fort Riley's 1st Battalion, 34th Armor, 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division as a mechanic. Officers also arrested Lee McGee, 37.

Cole and McGee appeared in Riley County District Court on Tuesday for a hearing, in which they refused to be extradited to Illinois.

The men are charged with the murder of James Jung, 53, a clothing store manager in Chicago during an armed robbery.

The governor of Illinois will now be required to issue a warrant for the extradition. The disagreements are about death penalty procedures.

Chicago police also arrested the manger of the Best Fit Clothing Store, Latorria Brown, 38, for the same murder. She is being held in Cook County, Ill., Jail without bond.

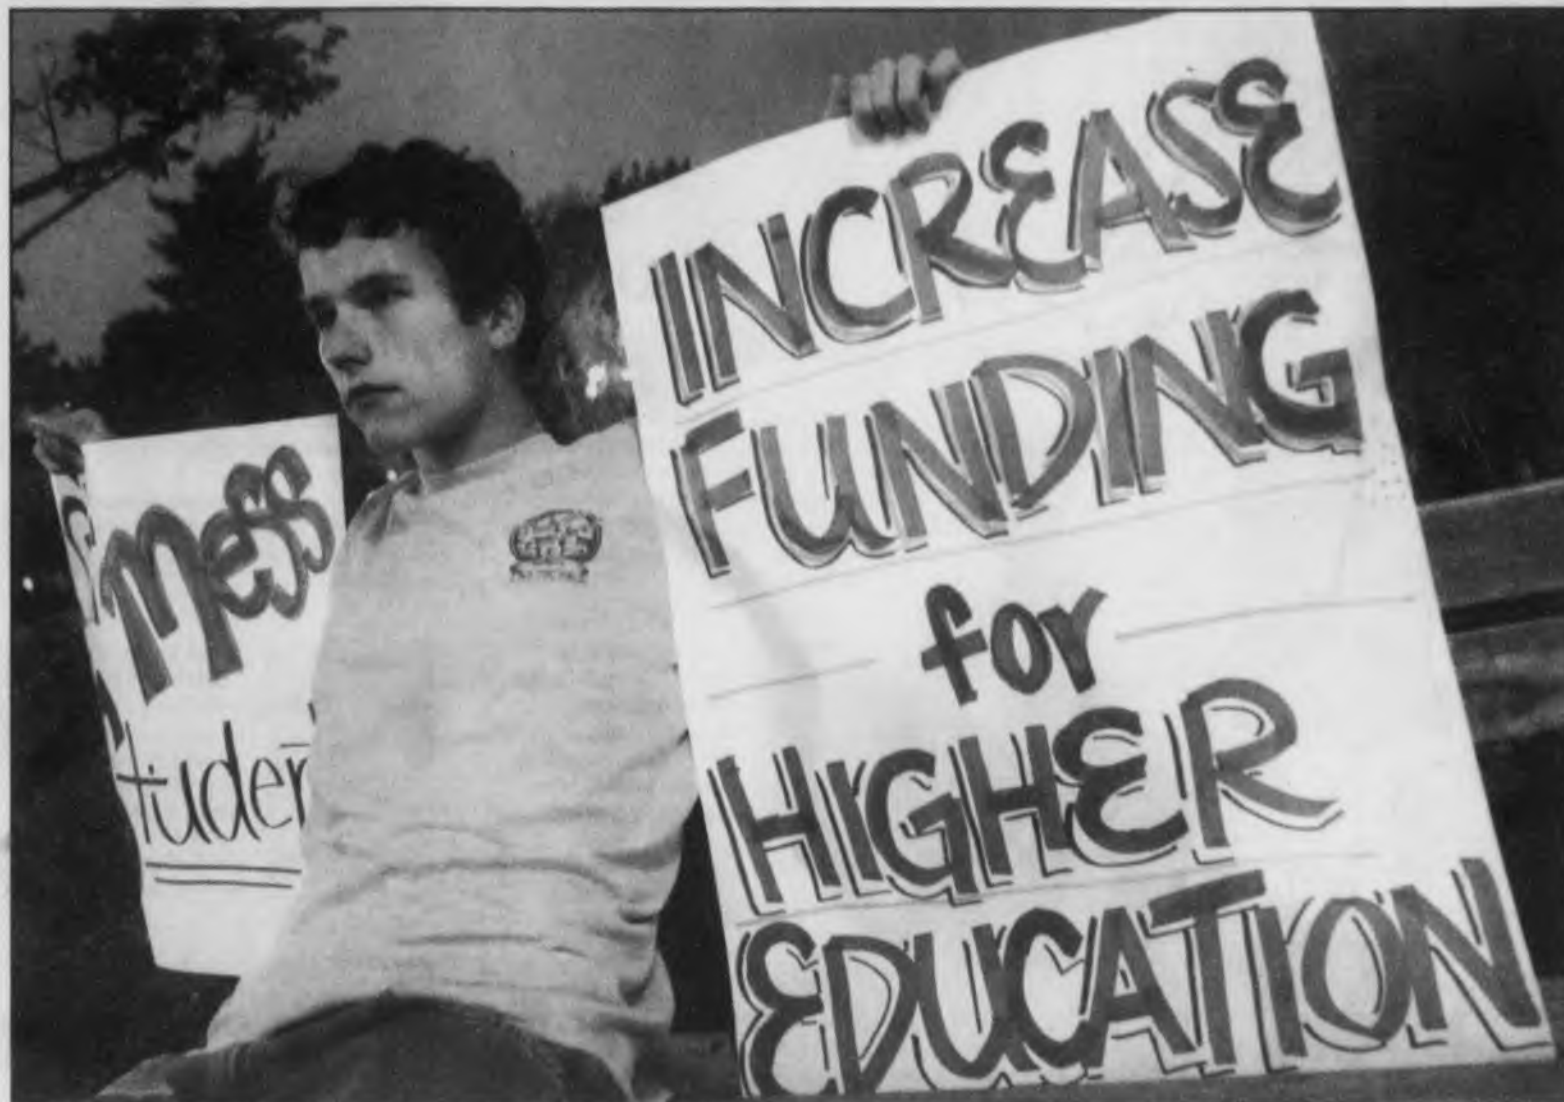

According to a Chicago Tribune story, Cook County Assistant State Attorney Molly Riordan said Brown conspired with her boyfriend to rob the store.

Authorities said that Thursday evening the boyfriend and another man entered and after pretending to shop, both men shot Jung several times.

The two men took Jung's wallets and tried to open the cash register before leaving, according to police officers.

Cole is being held on a $1.5 million bond and McGee is being held on a $2 million bond. Judge Paul Miller ordered the two men to appear Nov. 24.

Letter-writing campaign brings students to library for change

K-State students had something to say to state legislators Wednesday.

About 15 students carried picket signs as they chanted, "Hey hey, ho ho, budget cuts have got to go."

The rally was part of Pack the Library, Pack the Polls and was organized by the Student Governing Association.

Before the rally, about 40 students wrote letters to their hometown legislators, asking for more funding for higher education.

The number of students who rallied compares to 40 students last year and 400 students in 2002, according to Collegian archives.

Matt King, SGA committee chair for governmental relations, said the event encourages more student involvement in the legislative process.

Manhattan Jaycees set to open haunted house tonight

In 26th year, traditional haunted house to be bigger than previous efforts

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Halloween is a time for being scared and having fun, and there are several activities this weekend to achieve just that.

Jen Duncan, haunted house co-chair of the Manhattan Jaycees, said for the 26th year the Jaycees have operated haunted houses, but this one will be one of the biggest.

"The haunted houses generally move about, location-wise. It depends on the availability of space," Duncan said. "Generally we expect 1,000 to 1,500 people through our house, and we expect more this year because we have a really good location, which is the old Briggs building, and since we have a bigger house, we expect more people."

Halloween activities:

■ Boo Party, trick or treating from 4 to 6 p.m. Friday at Manhattan Town Center

■ Bewitching, trick or treating from 4 to 7 p.m. Friday at Westloop Shopping Center

■ Trick-or-Treating in Aggieville, 3:30 to 5:30 Friday

■ Manhattan-area Jaycee's Annual Haunted House, 7 p.m., Oct. 28 to 31 at 612 Pillsbury Drive (former Briggs building on K-

177) $5 for adults, $3 for children 12 and under (some content may not be suitable for children under seven)

■ Britt's Garden Acres, hay rack rides. 1400 S. Scenic Drive 10 to 6 p.m., Saturday, 12 to 5 p.m. Sunday $2 per person, includes hayrack ride, corn maze and a free pumpkin from the pumpkin patch

"It should be a good time. People should get their money's worth, it's the biggest we've done in this area in some time. It's not quite as comparable to the Kansas City houses, but it's a lot of fun."

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said if someone prefers trick or treating, "Trick-or-Treating in Aggieville" would be the place to do it, because it's fun, and easier than typical trick or treating.

"We are doing trick or treating from 3:30 to 5:30 (p.m.) Friday," Sieben said. "We're giving away free coloring books for the first 250 kids who bring a donation of a can of food for the Mayor's Holiday Tree food drive."

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Few people doubt that Hollywood can be a hotbed for politics and deal-making, and more than a few Web sites have taken note of a large number of celebrities speaking out against President Bush, his administration and the Republican Party, in general.

While many claim broad liberal bias in the media and amongst the ranks of Hollywood elites, there do exist a number of notable stars and public figures that have made their support of the president and his administration quite public and, at times, very vocal. Here are a few of those right-wing voices from the Hollywood and beyond.

Beltran

Lunar eclipse darkens Wednesday night sky

By Jay Dillon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Earth fully eclipsed the moon until 9:45 p.m. Wednesday night. The shadow first started to fall on the moon at 8:14 and was off at 11:54 p.m.

Unfortunately, here in Manhattan, star-gazers were unable to view the eclipse.

A lunar eclipse occurs when the sun, earth and moon are lined up. During a lunar eclipse, the sun is shining on the earth and the moon is behind the earth. The shadow from the earth then falls on the moon, causing the moon to be eclipsed.

Chris Sorenson, professor of physics, said solar eclipses occur about every six months.

"We get about one eclipse every six months, but those are usually partial eclipses," Sorenson said. "We get full ones about once a year, but a lot of times they occur in the middle of the night when everyone is sleeping. About once every four years we get a full one in the evening, which makes this one really cool."

Sorenson, along with many other physics teachers and students were planning to go to the Tuttle Creek Spillway to view the eclipse, but were disappointed when the clouds covered the sky.

Kristan Corwin, assistant professor of physics, said she had planned to give her students incentive for going to the spillway.

"I was going to give my students extra credit for going," Corwin said. "Obviously, now I can't."

Larry Weaver, professor of physics, wasn't planning to offer any extra incentives to his class.

"I notified my students and expected a lot of them to attend," Weaver said. "I was planning on going myself."

The North Central Kansas Astronomical Society (NCKAS) was planning to have the telescopes set up for students, residents and professors.

NCKAS has set up telescopes around Manhattan before this fall.

Weaver said he has been to the last two that NCKAS has offered.

"NCKAS was at the bluff overlooking Tuttle Cove last Saturday," he said.

Homecoming event reintroduced with changes

By Sara Sandock
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Purple dominated Ahearn Field House on Wednesday night as homecoming reintroduced Pant the Chant, a competitive cheering event among several campus organizations.

K-State students sat in their designated groupings, attentively watching the performances and cheering for their favorite group.

Pant the Chant is a homecoming event brought back into the schedule this year. It consists of each group performing a chant, using props and themes.

The groups represented at the event included the greek community, a majority of residence halls and Black Student Union.

"Pant the Chant has been a tradition in the years past, and we brought it back after a year break and made a few changes," said Stephanie Grecian, one of the event's coordinators said.

Some of the changes included limiting foot movement in the chants and dropping the number of participants in each group. The students still seemed to have a lot of fun.

"The best part of tonight was getting the entire greek community and other organizations together to celebrate being K-State students," said Karen Reiboldt, senior in management and marketing.

"It was really fun to see everyone's spirit, it must have been a really hard decision for the judges because they were all really good," said Megan Anderson, sophomore in elementary education.

This year, the winner of Pant the Chant in the student organization category was the Black Student Union and Delta Delta Delta sorority and Phi Gamma Delta and Kappa Sigma fraternities took first in the greek organization category.

TO THE POINT Accountability, reason needed in funding debate

Few issues are more important to college-aged people than the affordability and quality of a college education.

Those two issues are of great importance to our generation, as tuition increases and declining availability of financial aid sources continue to tax a student's ability to further his or her education.

While making our voices heard to our elected officials is both an appropriate and necessary form of civil discourse, we must temper our expectations with reason and effective solutions.

Events such as Pack the Library, Pack the Polls, and visits to the State Legislature, are excellent venues to send a message to politicians about our desire to keep higher education fairly priced.

In addition to making our concerns as students heard, we must actively seek out solutions our elected representatives can put into law to alleviate the increasing financial burden when paying for a college education.

Tuition rates, like so many things in life, do not remain constant; while the current trend of large-percentage increases is undesirable, it is a reality with which we must deal.

Use your opportunity Nov. 2 to make your voice heard at the polls, but do not forget to hold those officials accountable to your needs as citizens afterward.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

No surprises

Polling reveals nothing the masses don't already know

Seventy-three percent of Americans are enamored of polls.

We love them. We always want to know what our friends think, and we're always stunned when we hear the latest CNN Today/Gallup Post poll results. But it's getting out of control.

In election season, the news media outlets conduct unbiased polls to predict who will be the winner.

Unfortunately, the polls show President Bush deadlocked with Sen. John Kerry. Only one, the Fox News poll, shows a no-spin edge for the president, with 99.4 percent of the electorate planning to vote for Bush.

Only John Edwards and a bottle of ketchup reported they would vote for Kerry, according to the scientific poll of likely voters and condiments.

JAMES HURLA

To spawn further illegitimacy, the polls, as it turns out, are useless. While they may accurately reflect what the American people as a whole think, they do nothing to reflect the process by which we choose our president. The system is called the electoral college.

The electoral college is a complex system, wherein citizens cast votes, but the votes are not actually "counted," per se. Instead, they are sent to Florida, where the governor chooses the winner based on the closeness of his relationship to the candidates.

It's kind of like a fraternity recruitment, only with less T-posing, theft, vandalism and spanking. There is, however, much more alcohol, primarily because the Bush twins are invited to the campaign party.

The polls, which are updated approximately every 45 seconds on weekdays, actually do not account for the electoral college. All the polls have revealed in the past month is that — you might want to sit down for this — the election will be close.

This, of course, comes as a shock. In response to the breaking news that a tight race is imminent, the candidates have tried to sway the unshakable polls by pulling out their big guns — famous people.

Kerry's entourage includes such big names as Michael J. Fox, who would still be on "Family Ties" if it weren't for Bush's limits on stem-cell funding; Ben Affleck, who still can make out with Jennifer Lopez or Matt Damon on demand; and Michael Moore, who is currently hungry.

Bush reached for a different breed of famous supporters, commonly referred to as "those who might have some business talking about politics."

Former New York Mayor Rudolph Giuliani has put his full weight behind the president; Sen. John McCain has put about half his weight and a half-hearted smile; and California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger has mocked Ted Kennedy's weight.

Despite the political maneuvering, no polls have been swayed enough to give a decisive winner.

Except one. The Weekly Reader poll of America's schoolchildren — you remember Weekly Reader, right? — has correctly predicted the winner of every American president since Dwight Eisenhower in 1956.

The infallible bellwether of the electoral outcome is not nearly as divided as other national polls.

While we, the voting public, are faced with such troublesome issues as stem-cell research, the economy, national defense and the war in Iraq, children from around the country punched their schoolyard chum Chad and voted on what really matters?

Do they want someone who shares their reading level, or do they want a candidate who looks like a pony?

The election has been decided — and it wasn't even close.

Bush wins in a landslide, with more than 60 percent of the vote.

Now we can only hold our breath and wonder whether the Florida governor wants him to win, too.

ABBY HILES
Abby Hiles thinks the traditions of Halloween aren't just for children anymore.

Bush policies should please liberals

An epoch-defining event has occurred in Afghanistan.

The oppressive chains of a totalitarian theocracy have been severed and, in their place, democracy and freedom have ascended. In a land where, previously, women were not allowed to walk the streets alone, 41 percent of females made their way out to cast a vote in last week's national election.

In Iraq, the grand project of human freedom moves stubbornly forward under the watchful gaze of the world's oldest democracy.

According to the Washington Post, the United Nation's top electoral expert said preparations for the vote in Iraq are "on track," and Iraq's security situation would not detract from the vote's credibility.

Once democracy, tolerance and openness replace the brutal Saddam-era gulag-state of Iraq, they will begin to spread throughout the greater Middle East. Nihilistic death cults such as al-Qaeda will no longer be able to feed off the suffering and hopelessness felt by those under tyranny.

The brutal Islamic theocracy of Iran, bordered by the established democracy of Turkey, and the nascent democracies of Iraq and Afghanistan, is already feeling the reverberations of Middle East freedom. The mullahs have tried to repress the irrepressible human yearning for freedom by staging 120 public hangings of dissidents, minorities and women.

But the radical restructuring of the Middle East continues apace.

In this untold propagation of human liberty, where have our so-called "liberals" been? Sadly, they have either converted into reactionary realists, or become, as Slate columnist Christopher Hitchens put it, "fellow travelers with fascism."

Their hostility to the reshaping of the Middle East, the most liberal of endeavors, has been astonishing.

"You can't impose democracy by force," they wail, even in the face of such historical precedents as Germany and Japan, and now the contemporary example of Afghanistan.

"We should have had more allies," they say, as if the morality and rightness of an action hinged on whether it was the popular thing to do, whether countries such as France that benefited from the status quo would give their imprimatur.

"Look at the chaos in Iraq," they say, revealing their queasy aversion to freedom at the first sight of blood. Casualties and death are tragic, but if you must indulge in this macabre moral calculus I suggest you consider the estimated 300,000 murdered under Saddam and the horrifying prospect of an Uday/Qusay rule, before determining whether the current level of chaos has passed the threshold at which tyranny becomes preferable to freedom.

But, as we learned on Sept. 11, a stability of dictatorships, unspeakable tortures and freshly dug mass graves is no stability at all. Rather, it is the fecund breeding ground of terrorists that would reduce America to a land of drifting ashes.

Unwilling to accept the status quo of state terror in the post-9/11 world, President Bush has repudiated the shameful policies of his predecessors.

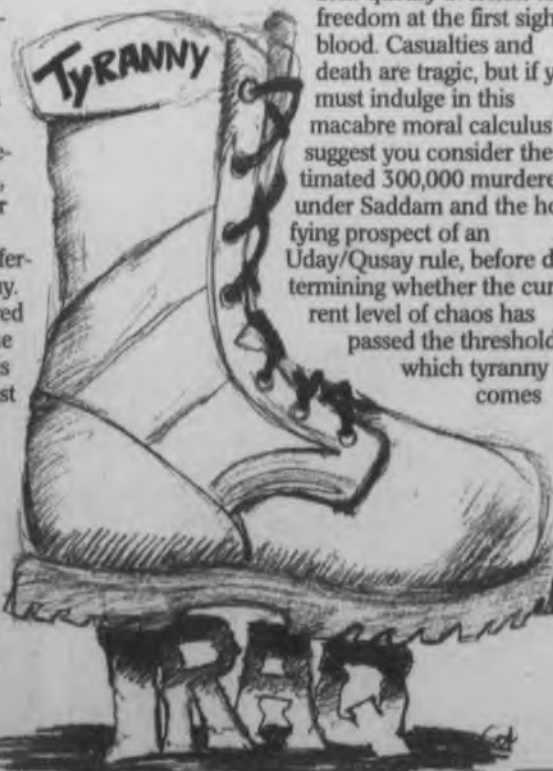

In a speech to the National Endowment for Democracy, Bush said, "Sixty years of Western nations excusing and accommodating the lack of freedom in the Middle East did nothing to make us safe ... Therefore, the United States has adopted a new policy, a forward strategy of freedom in the Middle East."

Those people masochistically fascinated with gloating over the litany of past American foreign policy faults should be the first to rally around Bush in this new era of moral internationalism.

But they don't, instead offering facile scoffs of "Halliburton" and "no WMD" — moral frivolities when compared to the massive good President Bush has done through the liberation of two countries from brutal tyrannies, acts that will stand out as two of the seminal events of this new century.

It seems anymore, that in the perverse worldview of many so-called "liberals," America is the universal corruptor whose actions are a priori evil. Better to have a country suffer under an oppressive, sadistic dictatorship than be tainted by the touch of American imperialism. In the end, there are no persuasive liberal, or even moral, arguments against the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. At a time, when a fourth wave of democratization is changing Middle East dynamics permanently, I should have hoped better from so-called "liberals."

Challenged realities

Purple Masque Theatre delivers mature production to address perceptions of reality, human interactions

By Tony Herrman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Absurdist playwright Edward Albee's play, "The Play About the Baby," involves two couples of universal characters and the theft of a baby.

Director Dan Heinz, graduate student in theater, said "The Play About the Baby," like all of Albee's plays, address questions about what it means to be human.

"Specifically it addresses the questions of ignorance and reality itself," he said. "It's about two people — Boy and Girl — who have so built their lives in a certain way that they are not capable of handling a certain challenge. What he ultimately speaks to is a line in the show, which is, 'our reality is determined by our needs.'"

In the play, Boy and Girl are a young couple who have a baby at the beginning of the play, and then Man and Woman take the newborn and make them question the baby's existence and whether or not they've actually lived their perceived experiences.

"Basically Man and Woman come in and challenge completely the reality Boy and Girl have established," Heinz said.

— He said they use a lot of manipulative techniques: using sights and situations Boy and Girl have already been through to prove their point.

"(Man and Woman) have these fantastic monologues where they basically present stories that are indicative of what they are going to do," he said. "They walk in and get them so turned around that Boy and Girl don't have the opportunity to really understand what happened."

Debra Morland, graduate student in theater who plays Woman, said Heinz described the relationship between Man and Woman as that of a comic duo such as "The Honeymooners" or Abbott and Costello.

John Richards, junior in theater and psychology who plays Man, said the couple has a partnership, and the leadership is always changing.

"It's not lovey dovey, but it's one of those relationships where I couldn't do it without her, and she couldn't do it without me. Everything's a little better with someone else, and she's my someone else," he said. "It sounds crazy, but it's almost like a scientist and his lab assistant. We're working on this project, and we have this common goal."

Just like Richards, Jefferson Cox (who plays Boy) is a junior in psychology as well as theater. He said it is a possibility that he and Richards were cast, because they are psychology majors.

"It's not like Shakespeare where we go out and fight each other with big ol' long swords; you go out and fight with your mind," he said. "So, John and I being those kinds of majors were able to dabble in a little bit of that, too."

Heinz said Albee generally writes quick people. Because of their situations Boy and Girl are able to present more, but not entirely, naturalism in their approach.

Rachel Fox, sophomore in theater, said to capture the naivety of Girl, she had to get back to the simplistic impulses of childhood.

"Basically Boy and Girl are the heart of the show, and I approached it needing a vulnerability," she said. "It's an almost elementary school mentality. Boy and Girl have a Peter Pan and Wendy type of relationship in the way they interact."

The posters for "The Play About the Baby" state it is for mature audiences. Although Heinz took out the nudity the script calls for — instead the actors will wear just the underwear for that portion of the play — he said he doesn't want audience members not knowing what they are getting into.

"Obviously we don't want kids or impressionable youth in here and then to start cursing," he said, "I don't want a college student to hear, 'people running around in their underwear,' don't come thinking that's all that happens."

"Yes, that happens, but there is a point to it."

He said he hopes the mature nature of the play will help the audience to appreciate the emotion involved.

"This is a more complicated play than a lot of the other shows you see, not here but anywhere," he said. "This play should inspire equal parts of emotion and thought."

Howard Stern criticizes FCC chairman

Shock jock Howard Stern made a surprise call to a radio station during an interview of the Federal Communications commission head, claiming the chairman only got his job because his father is Secretary of State Colin Powell.

Stern called in to KGO-AM radio in San Francisco during a live interview Tuesday with FCC Chairman Michael Powell. After claiming Powell consistently avoids him, Stern began to question his credentials.

"How did you get your job? It is apparent to most of us in broadcasting that your father got you your job, and you kind of sit there. And you're the judge; you're the arbiter. You're the one who tells us what we can and can't say on the air," Stern said. "And yet I really don't even think you're qualified to be the head of the commission."

Rhames signs deal for 'Kojak' series

"Who loves ya, baby?" Ving Rhames does.

Rhames has signed with USA Network to a weekly series of "Kojak," debuting in March. Bonnie Hammer, president of USA Network and the Sci Fi Channel, said Tuesday. Filming begins in Toronto in January.

Production wrapped in August on a two-hour original movie, which will now serve as the premiere episode for the nine-week original series, the network said.

Telly Savalas starred as the stylish, crime-dome Lt. Theo Kojak in the police drama, which aired from 1973-78.

"Kojak" is a perfect USA series," Hammer said in a statement. "The main character is a true American original, a crime-solver with an incredible mix of charm, street smarts and uncanny intuition. And in the hands of the great Ving Rhames, this is definitely not your father's 'Kojak.'"

Pomeroy returns from military tour

By Jessica Grant
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The band Pomeroy just got a firsthand look at six United States military bases in the Middle East as part of a three-week tour of six countries.

Chris Davis, Pomeroy drummer, said the tour opened his eyes.

"The trip was amazing. I expected a lot from the trip, and I got even more out of it," Davis said.

"It really changed my opinion about the situation. When you go see the military, you really get a grasp of their situation. I have a newfound respect for them," he said.

The band toured through military bases located in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Bahrain, Qatar, Djibouti and the United Arab Emirates.

David Fairbanks, lead singer for Pomeroy, said while there were some tight situations, the band never really feared for their safety.

I want to talk about entomophagy.

Entomophagy, in the layman's term, is the act of eating insects as a source of nutrition, and odds are you've probably consumed a disheartening amount of insects already this week.

Fly eggs, maggots, spiders, weevils, aphids and mites (among others) abound in foods we eat everyday and consider to be clean. There's no way to filter out all the bugs that enjoy the same foods we do; you just don't hear about it.

Hey, what you don't know won't hurt you, right?

Most of us assume that eating insects occurs only in remote, obscure parts of the uncivilized world. This is, for the most part, a myth, and our ancestors routinely gorged themselves on our small, exoskeletal friends, according to www.creepycrawly-cuisine.com.

The Greek and Roman societies, some of the most advanced cultures in human history, loved to feast on cicadas, honeyed locusts and stag-beetle larvae.

For you Christians out there, God decreed in Leviticus that acceptable foods include locusts, beetles and grasshoppers.

Why, even Native Americans included locusts, cicadas, moths and grubs in their diets.

Many cultures still practice Entomophagy today.

People in Ghana rely on insects during the planting season when standard foods are in short supply. Aborigines in Australia snack on witchetty grubs, honeybag bees and honeypot ants.

Our friends south of the border use a certain type of stink bug in some types of salsa, and also munch on ants, grasshoppers and a winged bug called Atta Cepolates.

Even China (though many of you conservatives out there don't consider them to be civilized), count ants, honeybee larva, wasp larva and pupa, as well as cicada nymphs, silk-worm pupa and (my personal favorite) fried scorpion on their list of yummys.

KU introduces required vaccination proposal

On-campus students may be required to receive meningitis vaccine before move-in

By Patrice R. Holderbach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An official at the University of Kansas confirmed a proposal that students who live on KU's campus next fall will be required to receive a meningitis vaccination before they move onto campus.

"Yes, it has been proposed that starting next fall all KU students living in university-owned residence halls, scholarship halls and Jayhawk Towers apartments be required to receive the meningitis vaccination," said Diana Robertson, associate director of Housing Office Administration at KU.

The possibility had been introduced this fall to parents and guardians attending KU Senior Days for prospective students. K-State is not considering such a policy, said Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion for Lafene Health Center.

Robertson said she was not sure if the proposal had been declared official.

"The policy would also strongly recommend that students living in other forms of group housing not owned and operated by the Department of Student Housing (such as sorority/fraternity houses, Naismith Hall, etc.) receive the vaccination and encourages all other students to become knowledgeable about meningitis and consider vaccination in order to reduce their personal risk," Robertson said.

The Centers for Disease Control defines the potentially fatal disease as "an infection of the fluid of a person's spinal cord and the fluid that surrounds the brain," according to www.cdc.gov.

To diagnose the disease, physicians do a spinal tap and if bacterial meningitis is discovered, antibiotics and sulfa drugs can be administered for treatment.

At K-State, the meningitis vaccine — which lasts for three to five years — is available but optional.

Lafene sent a letter about the vaccination to students last January. It said students who live in residence halls face a one in 20,000 chance of contracting some form of meningitis, while students who live elsewhere have a one in 100,000 chance. The letter also pointed out that the numbers are unknown for how greys may be affected in their living arrangements.

Kennedy said the CDC requires universities to notify students and parents or guardians about the possibility of meningitis. But until the CDC recommends universities require meningitis vaccinations of students, Kennedy said she doubted K-State would entertain such an idea.

From KU's admissions office, Tiffany Goebel said the university has a protocol of admitting qualifying students and then allowing staff at the Watkins Memorial Health Center to inform students if they don't have all required vaccinations up to date.

According to Watkins' Web site, www.ku.edu/~shs/, KU students can receive the vaccination for $73, and non-students are charged $104.

Lafene offers the vaccination to K-State students for $65.

The Watkins site lists a variety of social situations, such as residence hall life and going to bars, through which students can come into contact with the disease.

A KU student contracted meningitis last spring. Andy Marso, who has since graduated with a degree in journalism, became sick in April and underwent rehabilitation.

Tips for Meningitis prevention

- Practice good personal hygiene by covering your mouth when sneezing and coughing.
- Frequently wash hands with soap.
- Do not share eating or drinking utensils.
- Maintain good general health by eating a balanced diet, exercising regularly, getting adequate rest and avoiding alcohol.
- Avoid inhaling cigarette smoke, due to the fact that it increases susceptibility to infection.
- Know the symptoms of the disease, and immediately see a physician if they should occur.
- Consider getting the meningococcal vaccine, especially if you are in group housing.

"Toxins the disease released in his body destroyed skin tissue and forced doctors to amputate all his toes and fingers, except his right thumb," according to a September 2004 meningitis vaccine alert from the Kansas Alumni Association.

The university responded to the community's concern by giving vaccinations to "nearly 1,000 incoming students this summer, up from 380 last summer, as part of a continuing

A college campus fosters an atmosphere that can put students at risk for meningitis, and health officials say college freshmen can be six times more likely to contract meningitis than other students.

Students should look out for each other on this and other health issues, said Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion for Lafene Health Center.

"I think students need to be aware of what the symptoms of the disease are," Kennedy said. "They should be aware of the classic signs. It starts out kind of like the flu, with nausea and vomiting. A classic sign also is the person has a very stiff neck, and they can't put their chin on their chest — they can't make that movement."

Headache. High fever. Stiff neck. According to the Centers for Disease Control, these are symptoms of meningitis, which can lead to death within 48 hours.

Meningitis is contagious, although it cannot be transmitted as easily as a cough or the flu. And, people cannot spread the disease simply by casual contact, according to the CDC.

"People in the same household or day-care center, or anyone with direct contact with a patient's oral secretions (such as a boyfriend or girlfriend) would be considered at increased risk of acquiring the infection," the CDC Web site states at www.cdc.gov.

Though some universities require students to be vaccinated, K-State is not one of them.

According to the National Conference of State Legislatures, nine states require meningitis vaccinations or waivers of all students attending college in those states. They are Oklahoma, Georgia, Florida, Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Delaware and Maryland.

campaign to strongly encourage students living in group housing to receive the meningitis vaccine," the update stated.

Kennedy said Lafene organized two health clinics at residence halls this fall, providing 290 students with meningitis vaccines.

"It seems with the publicity that came out of KU that students pay attention to it more," she said. "Statistically speaking, on a campus our size, we can expect to see a case about every four years. It is a rare case, and when it does occur, it can be very devastating. But fortunately it doesn't happen that often."

The last case reported at K-State was in 1996.

Kathy Dickey-Wilson, clinic supervisor for the Riley County Health Department, said she did not know whether K-State should consider proposing a meningitis vaccination requirement for students living in the residence halls.

"We have a hard time requiring people to get childhood immunizations, let alone requiring them to get vaccines for something like meningitis," Dickey-

Wilson said.

The vaccines cost $73 at the RCHD. From June until late October, the clinic had administered 165 doses of the vaccine to college-aged patients, Dickey-Wilson said.

"I know a pretty good percentage of (the patients) were first-time students, because that vaccine is good for three years," she said.

A nurse or physician administers the vaccine through a single injection into the arm, and the vaccine becomes effective within a few days.

But, Dickey-Wilson cautioned, it's important to remember the vaccine is not 100 percent capable of preventing someone from contracting the disease, of which there are different strains.

"There is never a guarantee on a vaccine," Dickey-Wilson said.

The CDC recommends students be vaccinated for meningitis, Tetanus-Diphtheria, polio, chicken pox, Hepatitis B, measles, mumps, rubella and the flu.

Lafene offers each of these through its allergy and immunization clinic.

Davis said. "When you play a normal concert, the audience expects you to impress and entertain them, but these fans were so excited to see us play."

Fairbanks said some of the shows took on a freestyle feel.

"We had really user friendly shows, where we would have freestyle sessions that the audience would participate in," Fairbanks said. "They would come on the stage, and we developed friendships."

Overall, Fairbanks said the biggest problems the band faced were technical.

"Over there it's really a desert," he said. "It was so hot, and there was so much sand that our sound system had some malfunctions. We had some power and wiring problems, but there were no disasters."

Fairbanks said band members agreed that the trip was amazing, but they are glad to be back home.

Tonight the band will play a concert at Silverado's with local band Pins and Needles opening.

"We are really looking forward to playing in Manhattan," Fairbanks said. "The doors will open at 8 p.m., and the show should start soon after."

John Frano, drummer for Pins and Needles, said the decision to play with Pomeroy was easy to make.

"This show was just put together about three weeks ago," Franco said. "Pomeroy asked us to open up for them, and we immediately agreed. We have been friends with Pomeroy for several years, and we have always respected them."

"People may not expect the mix of music because our sound is rather heavy, but we also have a groove that really complements Pomeroy's sound. We've played with them before, and this was the least we could do for them."

INSECTS | Add bugs to list of life's devourable

well.

What do these people see in insects that we don't? Well, one thing is necessary. When standard foods aren't in supply you've got to eat what is on hand.

Bugs are also pretty.

One look at an upscale restaurant dish and you know people like to eat pretty things, despite what the end product looks like (maybe it's a subconscious desire to destroy fine things?).

Maybe it's just that our society as a whole is too queasy. We've been taught to regard insects as gross, filthy, and overly icky.

For some reason, being civilized means we can eat cuddly, furry animals that just want to warm our hearts and see us smile, but not ugly critters with pincers that spit tobacco juice. I propose that, since we seem to hate bugs so much, we eat them simply as a show of aggression.

The fact is, insects provide an excellent and oft overlooked source of protein, fat, and carbohydrates (Atkins be damned). Luckily, they taste good and provide a refreshing crunch to otherwise boring foods.

Senior Kendra Wecker, shown here Oct. 19 during Media Day at Bramlage Coliseum, recently was voted as the Big 12 Conference's preseason player of the year.

Wecker looks past praise at media day to focus on continuing quality play this year

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kendra Wecker isn't worried about the pressure of being named to numerous preseason award watch lists.

On Tuesday, the senior forward was named to another preseason watch list as the Big 12 Conference's coaches voted Wecker as the Big 12 preseason player of the year. She's also a candidate for the Wade Trophy, John R. Wooden and Naismith National Player of the Year.

"It's a great honor to be up for all those awards," Wecker said. "I am not putting any added pressure on myself. I am just looking at the season as a great opportunity, not only for myself, but for our basketball team, to make things happen this year."

During Wecker's junior season in 2003, the Marysville, Kan., native was fifth in the Big 12 in scoring with 16.8 points per game and in rebounding with 8.1 rebounds per game. Wecker was also an All-Big 12 First Team selection and was a All-America third-team selection.

Coach Deb Patterson said the pressure might be off of Wecker this season, even with the loss of former All-American and Big 12 Player of the Year, Nicole Ohlde.

"I think the reality is that for the past three years of her career, she has had a lot of hype, but this may be a relief to her because we are a little different and the expectations are a little uncertain," Patterson said.

Along with Wecker, four other players, Laurie Koehn, Chelsea Domenico, Brie Madden and Megan Mahoney will return for their senior year and attempt to defend K-State's 2003 Big 12 co-championship.

Wecker said the team's chemistry will be a key factor this season.

"Since the five of us have played together for so long, it will really help us and carry us through the season," she said.

Wecker is K-State's second all-time leading scorer with 1,724 points, third all-time in career rebounding with 795 and second all-time in career double-doubles with 36.

Baylor coach Kim Mulkey-Robertson said Wecker is a player who can hurt opposing Big 12 teams in many ways.

"Kendra Wecker is a player that can play with her back to the basket, facing the basket and the thing I will always say about her is she kills you, because she gets that extra rebound or that extra loose ball," Mulkey-Robertson said. "You just have to throw a lot of people at her, and when that one gets tired, you have to put another one in."

Talent, features make women's basketball enjoyable

After three magical years, many believe the women's basketball team might find the going a little tough this season.

After all, they are replacing Nicole Ohlde, the most prolific scorer in program history. Ohlde was such a force down low, teams had to double-team her, leaving the outside free for the guards to knock down threes like crazy.

You can't blame people for believing this year might be a down year for Deb Patterson's squad. But I disagree. I won't be giving up on this team any time soon.

First off, I'll admit it. I like watching collegiate women's basketball, especially the Wildcats.

Ever since the magical 2001-02 season, when K-State burst onto the national scene with a Sweet Sixteen appearance, I have been infatuated with Cat basketball.

If you were in Bramlage Coliseum on March 3, 2004, when the Wildcats won a share of the Big 12 Conference title, you would know how special they are in the hearts of many fans.

I feel the same way. The style of play in the women's game is a thing of beauty. The game is more about teamwork and fundamentals, as opposed to the physical nature of the men's game.

There is something special about watching Kendra Wecker dish out a pass to Laurie Koehn for a quick-fire three.

Wecker's turn-around jump shot is one of the most impressive athletic feats I have ever witnessed.

While I am concerned about the loss of Ohlde, I have as much optimism for this team as I have the past three years.

The talent is there, and while the Big 12 remains the toughest basketball conference in the nation, I believe this team can challenge for another Big 12 title.

Wecker, Megan Mahoney, and Koehn are seniors. Granted, when they were freshmen, many K-State fans were dreaming of no fewer than two national championships for this trio. Even though they have not made it past the Sweet Sixteen in the NCAA Tournament, they still are three of the top players in the conference.

Wecker is the preseason Big 12 player of the year, Koehn is the leading three-point shooter in Big 12 history, and Mahoney's ability to play four positions makes her a lethal weapon for the Cats.

Fellow senior Brie Madden, as well as junior Jessica McFarland and freshman Shana Wheeler, will each share the task of filling Ohlde's mammoth shoes. Madden and McFarland have plenty of game experience, and Wheeler could become a super-frosh, much like Ohlde was when she was Big 12 Freshman of the Year.

The unappreciated Chelsea Domenico and sophomore Twiggy McIntyre give the Cats loads of experience at point guard.

And then there's my favorite, sophomore Claire Coggins.

What's not to like about this girl?

She never takes a play off on defense, has a sweet outside shot, is as scrappy a basketball player as you'll find, and I think she looks good, too.

So the talent and looks are in place for another successful season for K-State.

I have faith in the Wildcats, and I certainly hope the rest of the K-State nation feels the same.

Rowers' five-week rest ends this weekend at Iowa regatta

By Stacy Ryan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's rowing team has made good use of their time off.

The Wildcats head to Iowa City, Iowa, this weekend to compete in the Head of the Iowa Regatta on Oct. 31, their first competition in almost five weeks.

Coach Patrick Sweeney said the team has used the time off to prepare with physically demanding practices and heavy workloads, but he is pleased with the effort.

"We've used the time to do a lot of physical hard work, and towards the end of last week, the girls were really starting to feel it," Sweeney said.

Sweeney also emphasized everything the team does is a progression. He said they continue to work on technique and switch things up to put together a good combo.

Senior Linzi Hauldren said the time off has been hard, but it will be beneficial in the long run.

"I really like competing, so having four weeks of just practice has been tough, but the time off has given us a chance to get faster and improve," Hauldren said.

Sophomore Danielle Scott said with the time off, the team was able to focus on technique, which is very important to the sport.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

The women's rowing team travels to Iowa City, Iowa, this weekend for the Head of the Iowa Regatta on Oct. 31. The Regatta includes crews from Minnesota, Drake, Nebraska, Kansas and Creighton.

"I see the time off as a positive, because we got to work on the little things and prepare for the Iowa race and the Sunflower Showdown," Scott said.

The Wildcats will be facing nationally ranked competion this Sunday with teams from Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Last year, the Wildcats had three teams finish in the top 10, including a fifth-place finish in the open eight and third place finish in the novice eight.

"The race will be a good indicator to see how we are up against ranked teams," Sweeney said.

The Iowa race is another stepping stone toward future races, including the Sunflower Showdown versus Kansas.

Hauldren said the Iowa race allows the team to compare themselves to ranked teams and see where they stand, and it also gives the athletes a chance to prepare.

"Even though the competitions are different, we can compare ourselves to KU in this race and get an idea of what to expect from them," Hauldren said.

Even though the team is looking ahead to the competition against KU, Scott said it is important to focus on this event.

"We're going up against a lot of good teams, but if we focus on our boat and stay within us, hopefully we can stay within the top couple of teams," she said. "We can't focus on other teams or we will get distracted. If we just do what we have been practicing, it's going to flow how we want and put an edge on us against other teams."

MLB | Bonds' 700th homer ball sold for over $800,000

Barry Bonds' 700th home run ball brought a top bid of $804,129 Wednesday after a 10-day online auction.

The ball had received 240 offers by the time Overstock.com closed the bidding.

Original owner, Steve Williams, said he will quit his job as a broker's assistant, but he has no idea what he will do for money.

In October 2001, Bonds' record-setting 73rd home run of the season sparked litigation that ended when a judge ordered two men who claimed ownership to split the $450,000 the ball fetched. Comic book art creator Todd McFarlane paid $3.2 million for Mark McGwire's 70th home run ball in 1999.

MLB | Red Sox sweep Cards for first Series win since 1918

The Boston Red Sox are World Series champions at long, long last. No more curse and no doubt about it.

Ridiculed and reviled through decades of defeat, the Red Sox didn't just beat the St. Louis Cardinals, owners of the best record in baseball, they swept them for their first crown since 1918.

Johnny Damon homered on the fourth pitch of the game, Derek Lowe made it stand up and the Red Sox won 3-0 Wednesday night. Edgar Renteria grounded out for the final out, wrapping up a Series in which the Red Sox never trailed.

Chants of "Let's go, Red Sox!" bounced all around Busch Stadium, with Boston fans as revved-up as they were relieved. Only 10 nights earlier, the Red Sox were just three outs from getting swept by the New York Yankees in the AL championship series before becoming the first team in baseball postseason history to overcome a 3-0 deficit.

Damon's leadoff homer and Trot Nixon's two-out, two-run double on a 3-0 pitch were all that Lowe needed. Lowe blanked the Cards on a mere three hits for seven innings.

Relievers Bronson Arroyo and Alan Embree worked the eighth and Keith Foulke finished it off for his first save.

Pomps for homecoming

Kaitlyn Hobby, freshman in open-option, works on a homecoming float Tuesday night at Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity. Members of Gamma Phi Beta sorority spent most of their time pumping in the basement, while fraternity members worked on another part of the float in the front yard. Lambda Chi Alpha members said they were not only going to stay up all night to continue working but also protect the float against anyone who might try to destroy it before judging.

Showdown in Baghdad looms

By Robert H. Reid
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — An uptick in airstrikes and other military moves point to an imminent showdown between U.S. forces and Sunni Muslim insurgents west of Baghdad — a decisive battle that could determine whether the campaign to bring democracy and stability to Iraq can succeed.

American officials have not confirmed a major assault is near against the insurgent bastions of Fallujah and neighboring Ramadi. But Iraqi Prime Minister Ayad Allawi has warned Fallujah leaders that force will be used if they do not hand over extremists, including terror mastermind Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.

A similar escalation in U.S. military actions and Iraqi government warnings occurred before a major offensive in Najaf forced Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr to give up that holy city in late August. And U.S. and Iraqi troops retook Samarra from insurgents early this month.

Now U.S. airstrikes on purported al-Zarqawi positions in three neighborhoods of eastern and northern Fallujah, 40 miles west of Baghdad, have increased.

And residents reported this week that Marines appeared to be reinforcing forward positions near key areas of the city. Other military units are on the move, including 800 British soldiers headed north to the U.S.-controlled zone.

The goal of an attack would be to restore government control in time for national elections by the end of January. However, an all-out assault on the scale of April's siege of Fallujah would carry enormous risk — both political and military — for the Americans and their Iraqi allies.

A series of policy mistakes by the U.S. military and the Bush administration have transformed Fallujah from a shabby, dusty backwater known regionally for mosques and tasty kebabs into a symbol of Arab pride and defiance of the United States throughout the Islamic world.

A videotape obtained Tuesday by Associated Press Television News featured a warning by masked gunmen that if Fallujah is subjected to an all-out assault, they will strike "with weapons and military tactics" that the Americans and their allies "have not experienced before."

Regardless of whether the threat was an empty boast, insurgents elsewhere in Iraq could be expected to step up attacks to try to relieve pressure on fighters in Fallujah and Ramadi.

Kansas science classes continue dissection labs

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For some high school students, dissection day in biology class is a dreaded day. They can't stand the thought of slicing into Kermit or another animal.

Students like this can breathe a bit easier now, at least in some states. Nine states, including Florida, California and Virginia, have passed a law requiring schools to provide students with alternatives to dissection.

Teachers must provide supplemental materials with which students can learn, such as computer programs, models and Internet tutorials. Schools that don't provide these may be faced with a fine.

Kansas high schools have no such law under which they must operate.

Dick Nelson, science department chair for Manhattan High School, said Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 has not set a protocol for teachers to follow if students don't want to do a dissection.

"It's one of those teacher by teacher things," Nelson said. "In general, what we do, in our course distribution we try to warn the students that dissection would be part of the class."

Nelson said there is computer software available for students who are uncomfortable with dissections. He said the teachers try to work with the students who don't wish to participate in dissections.

"Most of our teachers are very sensitive to those types of things and don't try to be obstinate about those kinds of things," Nelson said.

Mandy Thomas, a Manhattan High graduate, said dissecting things in high school was what made her interested in medicine.

"It made me more interested in learning about anatomy," Thomas, sophomore in biology and pre-medicine, said. "You get to learn more in detail about different systems in the body and how different anatomies work."

Thomas said she thought it would be hard to see how different anatomies of different animals work without actually seeing the bodies.

K-State students not wishing to perform dissections have no such options. This usually doesn't pose a problem said Brett Sandercock, assistant professor in biology. The students who are required to do dissections are only those in upper level biology classes.

"It rarely comes up (that students don't want to dissect)," Sandercock said. "Most people are interested in the material and wanted to enroll."

Sandercock said he thought most students in these classes are life sciences majors and are going into these fields.

He said for these students, dissecting animals is a must if they wish to have a career with medicine or veterinary medicine.

"For a general student, that might be something reasonable," Sandercock said. "For a student who wants to go into veterinary medicine, there's not a substitute for dissection."

Business survey reveals U.S. economic growth

By Martin Crutsinger
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy continued to grow in September and early October despite being buffeted by rising energy costs and increased uncertainty caused by the presidential campaign, the Federal Reserve said Wednesday, in its last snapshot of business conditions before Election Day.

The survey of business activity around the country, compiled from reports submitted by the Fed's 12 regional banks, depicted an economy that was moving ahead with even the hard-hit manufacturing sector beginning to regain its footing after a prolonged period of weakness.

"Economic activity continued to expand in September and early October," the Fed said in the new survey, which found that the pace of activity had quickened in the Richmond and Dallas districts. Five other districts — Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis and Kansas City — were reporting steady expansions.

The Fed's report will be used by central bank policy-makers when they next meet on Nov. 10 to decide whether to raise interest rates further.

Many economists believe that the central bank will push up rates for a fourth time this year in an effort to make sure that a rebounding economy does not generate unwanted inflationary pressures.

But some analysts believe the Fed could decide to pause in its credit tightening out of concerns that rising energy prices, which climbed to record highs above $50 per barrel for crude oil, could threaten to derail the economic recovery.

While noting higher energy costs did seem to be constraining consumer and business demand in some areas, the Fed survey did not signal any worries this year's price spike could bring on a recession, as did the oil shocks of the 1970s and early 1980s.

The Fed noted some districts were reporting increased uncertainty stemming from the election.

In other economic news, the Commerce Department reported Wednesday orders for big-ticket manufacturing goods edged up a modest 0.2 percent in September while sales of new homes were up 3.5 percent to the third highest monthly level on record.

Story, editorial lack research to address turbine issue

Editor,

I appreciate the Collegian Editorial Board and Scott Seel's interest in alternative energy sources "Energy in the Breeze," (Oct. 22). Society clearly needs to develop the technology to thoughtfully address our energy needs. I was, however, disappointed in the obvious lack of research that went into Friday's articles on wind energy.

Alan Pollom, director of the Kansas Chapter of the Nature Conservancy, was no doubt incorrectly quoted as saying the Flint Hills are 97 percent destroyed. Information submitted by the Nature Conservancy to the Governor's Wind and Prairie Task Force, whose Manhattan public meeting I attended, stated that 97 percent of the nation's original tallgrass prairie has been destroyed. The Flint Hills are home to a majority of the remainder.

In addition, I was confused by the assertion made by the editorial staff that turbines should be considered "human-made, artistic contributions to the prairie that provide a cleaner source of oil than what we currently rely upon." Wind turbines do not have the ability to produce oil in any way. Nor will they reduce our dependency on foreign oil.

Nor do I consider these structures artistic. This statement would be similar to saying we should place a few thousand of them, with their blinking aircraft warning lights, along the rim of the Grand Canyon. That would be a good way to have some "human-made artistic contributions" spruce up that ugly hole in the ground.

A thousand giant wind turbines (a Boeing 747 can fit within the span of their blades) in the Flint Hills would produce approximately one tenth of one percent of our nation's electricity. This hardly justifies an assault on the last of the tallgrass prairie that we Kansans should feel privileged to hold in trust. Green energy isn't green if it destroys our natural heritage.

Potential Supreme Court nominations should be considered when voters cast ballots Tuesday

Editor,

Nov. 2 is Election Day. One reason to look at the candidates carefully is the Supreme Court.

The current Court of Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Stevens, O'Connor, Scalia, Kennedy, Souter, Thomas, Ginsburg, and Breyer, have not changed since 1994, the longest for a Court of nine justices, and the longest in U.S. history since the 1820s.

Why is that important? Several justices may retire in the next four years: Rehnquist is 80. Stevens is 84 and two justices have battled cancer.

Whoever becomes the next president will likely choose at least one and potentially several Supreme Court justices and may dramatically shape the Court and our nation's laws.

A nominee will be closely scrutinized, but he or she stands a good chance of winning a seat on the Court.

President Bush wants to appoint a "strict constructionist" similar to Scalia or Thomas, while Sen. Kerry would look for a judge whose opinions are neither "conservative or liberal," to paraphrase the late Justice Potter Stewart.

The Supreme Court's opinion is the law of the land, whether the issue is abortion, affirmative action, civil rights, free speech, religious liberty, school vouchers or presidential elections.

While you are voting Nov. 2, think about what kind of justice you would like to see appointed — the person who wins definitely will be thinking about it.

May the best man win on Election Day.

United States unable to enforce trade policies on other nations due to billion-dollar budget deficits

THE DAILY CAMPUS
U. CONNECTICUT

STORRS, Conn. — There are many misconceptions about the U.S. government's debt to other countries, also known as our budget deficit.

Yes, it is a problem and a number so large is difficult to ignore. But the absolute number, a projected debt of more than $400 billion dollars for 2004, is not the statistic which one should observe to understand the true situation.

It is necessary to examine the U.S.-projected debt as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Our budget deficit is projected to be 4.7 percent of GDP in 2004 by the Organization for Economic Co-Operation. When compared to Germany's 3.7 percent, France's 3.8 percent, Britain

2.9 percent and Japan's huge 7.1 percent of GDP, the United States is not borrowing too much.

Though the government's debt as a whole is not a huge problem, we are borrowing too much money from the same countries, such as Japan, China and other Asian countries. They buy our debt, because it enables them to keep their currencies low, which makes their exports cheaper in the U.S. and our products more expensive in their markets.

Because we are buying products from Asia rather than American companies, we are losing many manufacturing jobs as they are being outsourced. The problem, aside from the loss of American jobs, is that these manufacturing plants in Asia do not have similar relative wages or proper working conditions.

The U.S. needs to step in and demand that China and other Asian nations treat their workers well and give them a decent wage.

However, because we owe these same nations a large portion of our debt, we lack the ability to enforce our trade laws and labor standards. A nation cannot enforce policies on its bankers.

actually voice their opinion to Topeka," he said. "Not every day does John Doe student get to write a letter to their representatives and say this is an issue that is important to me, and this is what I think about it."

Ryan Newton, freshman in mass communications, said he was told about the event by his fraternity pledge brothers.

"If we can get enough people here together, it can be a good idea to make an impact," he said. "Tuition is just going to keep going up. It's going to affect me."

Adair Parreiras Jr., senior in hotel and restaurant management, said tuition increases are already affecting students.

"If tuition increases, we don't have enough jobs in Manhattan that pay well," he said. "We will have a 15 percent increase in tuition but not a 15 percent increase in salaries."

Parreiras said this means less money for students to spend on other things.

"It affects the way we eat, the way we entertain ourselves and the way we socialize with other people," he said.

State legislators were invited to attend the event, including Rep. Roger Reitz (R) of the 67th District and Rep. Sydney Carlin (D) of the 66th District.

Reitz, who serves on the higher education committee, said writing letters is great, but talking to legislators in person is even better.

"If you find out who your senator is, who you legislator is and make that plea, it would be better," he said.

Carlin also serves on the higher education committee, and she assured students she is concerned about their issues.

"We have a lot of issues that we deal with that affect you and your education," she said. "I'm supporting your values, and I'm going to be there for you when K-State needs me."

2 arrested for forced servitude

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Two Kansas residents have been arrested and charged for allegedly holding six mentally ill individuals and making them work against their will, an FBI spokesman said.

Twenty FBI agents searched two group homes in Newton, Kan., serving residents with mental illnesses, Jeff Lanza of the FBI told The Kansas City Star. Four adults were rescued from one home and two from the other.

A man and a woman were arrested Tuesday in connection with the servitude case.

The complaint and affidavit in the case remained under court seal in Wichita and Lanza offered few details on the case. The couple has not been identified.

Lanza said the six mentally ill individuals had lived in the group homes for "a long period of time" and had been forced to work.

"The initial charge involves that, but as with all criminal complaints, other charges possibly could result," Lanza said.

It was not clear what kind of work the individuals performed.

The charges and a sworn statement were to be unsealed Wednesday, Lanza said, and the two suspects were expected to appear in court.

Lanza said the FBI has been working on the case for about three weeks with the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

It was not clear how the alleged servitude became exposed.

Officials say Arafat very ill, breaking fast

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Yasser Arafat's health deteriorated Wednesday, and a team of doctors went to his compound to examine the Palestinian leader, a Palestinian official said.

The 75-year-old Arafat has been ill for two weeks, suffering from what Palestinian officials said was the flu. Israeli officials speculated he might have stomach cancer, but two of Arafat's doctors said Wednesday that a blood test and a biopsy of tissue taken from his digestive tract showed no evidence of cancer in that part of the body.

On Tuesday, a hospital official said Arafat was suffering from a large gallstone. The gallstone, while extremely painful, is not life-threatening and can be easily treated, the official said.

Late Wednesday, Arafat's condition worsened and doctors were sent to examine him, an official in Arafat's office said.

Arafat's health has been the subject of intense speculation.

On Wednesday, Arafat continued to rest and broke his Ramadan fast for a second straight day, aides said.

HALLOWEEN | Event will have carnival atmosphere of course we have the homecoming parade and block party afterwards, but it's easy for parents because they can park once and go up and down the street and get a lot of good candy."

Sieben said Aggieville will have a carnival-like atmosphere with Varney's offering pumpkin decorating, Dusty Bookshelf with a maze, local merchants, some dressed up, will bring food out to the street and Kite's will have a moonwalk.

For a more laid-back, rural feel, Angela Cottier, employee at Britt's Garden Acres, said Britt's offers a hayrack ride.

"This is the last weekend we're doing it for the season," Cottier said. "For $2 per person, you get to go on the hayrack ride, go through a corn maze and you get a free pumpkin at the pumpkin patch."

"We generally get a lot of families, and it can get really busy over the weekends."
